The inmates probably chose the best place in the prison to hole up, he said. The negotiators' best hope is that the inmates finally get hungry or otherwise desperate enough to let them in, Sutton said.

The hostage standoff began Sunday morning after an inmate attacked two guards and a worker in a kitchen. That prisoner and another inmate then got into the observation tower where the two guards were stationed.

Since then, negotiators have been allowed to see the guards twice; on Thursday, the guards climbed to the top of the watch tower on their own. Negotiators talked to the guards – one male and one female – as recently as Wednesday.

"People like to stay active and participate because it makes them feel more a part of the K-State family," freshman Kevin Graham said.

Entries for all divisions are being accepted for basketball, four-wall handball doubles, four-wall racquetball doubles, table tennis doubles and wally ball doubles.

Also, students looking for a few extra bucks can sign up in the intramurals office to be a referee and help officiate some of the intramural sports.

"This is a great way to make money. Plus the training is free, and many people find that they are very talented officials," Martini said.

Martini said many people who become proficient officiate all four major sports of the year.

"These guys give 150 percent calling the games, but they have a lot of fun doing it," he said.

KEITH | Country singer to perform Saturday at Bramlage

Planning for the event has been underway for the past four months. Muller said one of the reasons Keith agreed to play at Bramlage was its proximity to Fort Riley. Keith, known for his booming patriotism, has been selecting venues near military institutions as a way of giving back to our armed services.

Muller said Keith's performance is a big event for Bramlage and the first of its kind to come to K-State in quite a while.

"We're very pleased and very happy we could accommodate him," Muller said. "This is the first concert we've had since 2000, and we're happy to be back in the business of having big shows."

Muller said having the opportunity to get a big show is a rare treat. Also rare is to have a great opening act as well. Opening for Keith will be county singer Blake Shelton.

If you go

Toby Keith concert

When: Saturday, Jan. 24. Doors open at 6:30 p.m., opening act begins at 7:30 p.m.
Where: Bramlage Coliseum
How much: Tickets are available for $50 plus a service charge. There will also be a charge for parking.

For a big show like this to come through Manhattan, several things must come together. First, the stop must be on the tour's route. Second, the act has to be right for the market.

"Toby has a lot of fans in this area and we were able to make it happen," Muller said.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, the music industry has changed, including touring, Muller said.

There are fewer musicians touring and there have been fewer dates available. This has made it hard to get entertainers to come to K-State.

Another change since Sept. 11 is heightened security. Muller said those coming to the concert can expect security at the door and to have any small bags or purses checked.

The tight security was part of Keith's requirements.

"Toby Keith has different security because he's taken a stand on international issues," Muller said.

Despite the security, Muller doesn't expect the show, or Keith, to disappoint.

"There's a difference between someone who's an entertainer and someone who's a performer," Muller said. "We're looking forward to a great show."

TENNIS | Cats to host invitational this weekend

Despite the statistics that have been compiled in the past, it is evident that the players have stopped thinking about numbers and starting thinking about the importance of their mental game.

"When I first go to Ahearn, I go to the training room and heat. I try to relax and only think about my game. I don't worry about who I am up against. I just think about how I feel, my strokes and my shots," Castillejos said.

Castillejos also takes pride in the team's unity.

"We get together with the coach about five minutes before the meet and get into a circle. We talk about what we want to achieve that day," she said.

The K-State Invitational will be in Ahearn Field House at 3 p.m. today and concluding Sunday mid-afternoon.

The meet is open to the public and free of charge.

Cats struggle to keep momentum

K-State's Jeremiah Massey pressures Texas A&M's Antoine Wright during the Wildcats' win over the Aggies on Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State's defense has been the key factor in the Wildcats' success this year.

Wildcat men look to improve record against struggling Oklahoma team

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the last things people expected at the beginning of the basketball season was K-State having more Big 12 wins than Saturday's opponent, Oklahoma.

The Wildcats (9-5, 1-2) will travel to Norman to take on a struggling Sooner (10-4, 0-3) team that is coming off four straight losses after opening the season with 10 straight wins and a top-10 ranking.

Although Oklahoma is off to a slow conference start, Coach Jim Wooldridge knows that playing the Sooners at home will be a tough matchup.

"It will take an extraordinary game to beat them at home," Wooldridge said.

"We are going in there on Saturday to play a good Oklahoma team. They may have lost a few, but they are still a good team."

Jarrett Hart
SENIOR GUARD

Senior guard Jarrett Hart agreed.

"We are going in there on Saturday to play a good Oklahoma team. They may have lost a few, but they are still a good team," Hart said.

In last year's contest, it took overtime to decide the outcome at Bramlage Coliseum. The Sooners escaped with a 91-89 victory and went on to win four of its next five games.

This year, however, Oklahoma has dropped out of the top 25 and is reeling after a poor performance against Texas Tech (15-2, 3-0) Monday, scoring only 47 points.

K-State snapped a four-game losing streak of its own, after rallying back to defeat Texas A&M (7-7, 0-3) Wednesday night, to get their first conference win. The Wildcats have lost five straight to Oklahoma and the Sooners lead the all-time series 98-87.

Women to battle competitive Huskers Saturday

Wildcats seek 12th consecutive win, hope to stay unbeaten against Big 12 competition

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a week off, the No. 10 women's basketball team goes back to work Saturday when the Wildcats travel to Lincoln to take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

K-State is starting to catch fire and has won 11 games in a row. During the streak, the 13-2 Wildcats have won by an average of 31.6 points.

The team is coming off a 79-50 thrashing of Kansas in a game where the Wildcats shot an impressive 66 percent in the first half.

After the game, K-State improved to 6-0 on the season when shooting 50 percent or better from the field.

Nicole Ohlde had 20 points and nine rebounds, while Megan Mahoney added 15 points, seven assists and seven rebounds.

The Wildcats are the last Big 12 team to be undefeated in the conference.

The 4-0 standing marks the third straight year the team has started 4-0 in conference play.

The Huskers will try to bounce back from a 68-55 loss to No. 3 Texas Tech Wednesday night.

The Huskers put forth a valiant effort, but the Lady Raiders used an 18-4 run during a seven-minute span from the end of the first half through the start of the second for the win at the United Spirit Arena in Lubbock, Texas.

With the loss, Nebraska slipped to 13-3 overall and 3-2 in conference play.

However, the Huskers are undefeated at home so far this season with a 9-0 home mark and historically have been tough to beat.

Since the Bob Devaney Sports Center opened in 1976-77, the Huskers are 273-96 (.740) at home, including 96-60 (.615) in conference games.

During the past five seasons, Nebraska has averaged more than 4,200 fans per game and ranked among the top 25 teams nationally in average home attendance each season.

Coach Deb Patterson is fully aware of the challenge that the Cornhuskers pose this weekend.

"You look at the core group, and they are a good basketball team with a good work ethic," Patterson said. "They get the job done and are assertive on the boards.

Patterson also said that the Husker team can be dangerous from beyond the arch.

"They play an inside-outside game and have two players on the floor at all times that can shoot the three ball so you have to always defend that," Patterson said.

"They are a good team and their record indicates that. They are legitimate. They are a competitive team and we will take a serious demeanor into that game."

Wildcat men have chance for 1st Big 12 road game

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Everybody's a good defensive team to us. This might be the worst offensive team Oklahoma has has since I've been here."

Kelvin Sampson
OKLAHOMA COACH

For years, nothing has struck more fear in the hearts of Big 12 basketball teams than a trip to Norman, Okla.

Many teams would walk onto the Oklahoma Sooners' home court with optimism, only to have their pride ripped apart by a suffocating Sooner defense and a tenacious home crowd.

On Saturday, the K-State men will walk into the Lloyd Noble Center, but this time something is different.

After a 10-0 start and being ranked as high as seventh nationally, the Sooners have dropped four games in a row.

Texas Tech was the most recent victor over Coach Kelvin Sampson's squad, beating up on Oklahoma 67-47 in Lubbock, Texas.

No doubt.

Coming off three Big 12 tournament championships, a 2002 Final Four and an Elite Eight finish last season the Sooners were of thought to have staked a solid claim among the conference's best this decade.

However, in the past month Oklahoma has been exposed on several fronts.

The Sooner offense has been nothing short of horrendous during the four-game losing streak, averaging only 59 points a game and shooting 37 percent from the field.

For the season, Oklahoma ranks last in the Big 12 in field goal percentage and next to last in scoring offense.

Sampson minces no words when describing his team's offensive output.

"Everybody's a good defensive team to us," he said. "This might be the worst offensive team Oklahoma has had since I've been here."

Huskers find success in returning starters

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2003-04 Nebraska Husker season has been a successful one so far. Backed by an experienced group of veterans, the Huskers stand 13-3 overall and 3-2 in Big 12 Conference action.

Nebraska has featured the same starting lineup for all 16 games this season and are led by senior guard Margaret Richards, who is averaging a team-leading 11.0 points, 7.7 rebounds and 3.1 assists per game. Senior guard Keasha Cannon-Johnson has added 10.7 points, a team leading 8.8 rebounds, and 3.6 assists and 1.7 steals per game while senior forward Alexa Johnson has pitched in 10.6 points and 4.5 boards per contest.

Though Nebraska returned five veterans to this year's lineup, the team is definitely different from the 2002-03 squad. Other than the five returning starters, no other active Husker had played a regular season game before the team's season opening win over Wofford.

Nebraska has had to deal with the loss of one of the team's top-scoring freshman. Heather Kephart has not played in the last seven games since suffering a foot injury in practice on Dec. 20. Despite missing the last seven games, Kephart leads the Huskers with 17 made 3-pointers and ranks fourth on Nebraska's single season 3-point chart for freshman.

The Huskers are off to one of the best starts in school history. Nebraska matched its best 11-game start after closing the non-conference season with a 10-1 record. The opening matched 10-1 previous starts in 1998-99 and 1996-97.

One of the keys to the team's early season success has been the Huskers' aggressiveness on the boards. Nebraska ranks second in the Big 12 by averaging 44.5 rebounds per game, while ranking sixth in the league with a plus-7.9 team rebounding margin. Nebraska has been at its best on the offensive glass, where the team is averaging 15.2 offensive boards per game.

Nebraska's ability to score big at the free-throw line has been equally impressive. The Huskers rank second in the conference with a 74.5 free throw percentage.

K-State freshman Cartier Martin (center) watches the Wildcats' game from the bench against Texas A&M on Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum. Martin has been sidelined with a foot injury and could be out for two more weeks.

Point guard bounces back from injury

Willingham back in action following shoulder problems

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Throughout the season, injuries are a constant threat to coaches and players, and K-State is no different.

The Wildcats have had three players go down with injuries, missing a combined 15 games on the season.

Most notably, the highly touted freshman duo of Dez Willingham and Cartier Martin have been the biggest losses to the team.

But Willingham made a triumphant return to the lineup Wednesday in the win over Texas A&M.

Originally placed on the inactive list with a shoulder injury, the De Soto, Texas native came into the game with 14:33 left in the first half.

"At first I was kind of thinking about it (shoulder injury). After I played for awhile, I forgot about it. I forgot it even was hurt."

Dez Willingham
POINT GUARD

In the second half, Wooldridge let loose his talented freshman guard. In 12 minutes, Willingham registered six points, four assists and sparked the Wildcats' offense on their way to the win over the Aggies.

"He gives us more offense, another ball handler and more depth," Wooldridge said.

Willingham said the injury was in the back of his mind, but he soon forgot about it.

"At first I was kind of thinking about it (shoulder injury)," Willingham said "After I played for awhile, I forgot about it. I forgot it even was hurt."

"I wasn't that nervous. I was more nervous about playing in my first Big 12 game more than anything," Willingham said.

Martin has missed the last the four games due to an ankle injury suffered in K-State's loss at St. Louis on Jan. 3 and is out for the foreseeable future.

The 6-foot-8 freshman forward from Houston had two starts in seven games and was averaging 9.9 points per game and shooting 41.4 percent from the field.

Also returning from injury to the bench for the Wildcats is junior forward, Josh Eilert, who had missed six games with a foot injury.

He did not play in the Texas A&M game and has seen limited action in the three games he played in.

OKLAHOMA | K-State will depend on defense to win game

The Wildcats will rely on its defense to try and stop Oklahoma. K-State's defense has held every opponent to less than 48 percent field goal shooting and has only been out rebounded three times this season.

"We have to play Big 12 solid defense," sophomore guard and Oklahoma native Marques Hayden said.

Hart said Wooldridge has been pushing the team.

"He's been challenging us all year; we just have to come out and execute what we practice," Hart said. "We just have to keep fighting and fighting."

K-State will also rely on the offensive play of senior guard, Tim Ellis. Ellis is averaging 13.4 points per game and is shooting 54 percent for the floor, which leads the team in both categories.

Wooldridge said the most important thing for his squad to do, is to keep improving.

"If they keep digging and plugging along, they can make good things happen," Wooldridge said.

Despite a poor offense – something Oklahoma has had in the past even when successful – perhaps the primary reason for the Sooners' struggles is on the other end of the floor.

Although the Oklahoma defense is still ranked in the top half of the Big 12, it has shown signs of weakness during the current losing streak.

Oklahoma has given up 77 points per game in the last four contests, giving up 86 points in a loss to Connecticut – unheard of in the Kelvin Sampson era.

Following a blowout loss at the hands of Oklahoma State, Sampson acknowledged the fate of his team rests almost solely on the defense's shoulders.

"We're not gonna be a very good offensive team," Sampson said. "We can defend a lot better. You get stops and you rebound better, then your offense isn't as magnified.

Coming into the season, both were poised for breakout campaigns as Bookout was named to the All-Big 12 Freshmen team and Alexander was honored on the All-Big 12 Reserve team last season.

Their limited play has placed a heavy burden on Oklahoma's freshmen backcourt of Drew Lavender and Lawrence McKenzie, who have shown flashes of brilliance but have also displayed inconsistency on the offensive end of the floor.

Men's defense shows improvement against A&M

Cats putting up numbers comparable to Big 12 leaders

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Wednesday night's K-State (9-5, 1-2) victory, Texas A&M center Andy Slocum was frustrated by the loss, which sent his team to a 0-3 record in the conference.

His explanation of what happened down the stretch of a closely played game?

"They stepped up and guarded us a little bit harder," Slocum said. "They forced some turnovers and got some easy baskets. That got the momentum going in their favor. We just didn't make good decisions with the basketball."

What frustrated Slocum has been the Cats most consistent play all season, their defense.

At home or away, win or lose, it all starts and ends on defense for this year's Wildcat basketball team.

Defense is what kept A&M's Antoine Wright, the Big 12's No. 9 scorer averaging 14.8 per game to two points on 1-of-10 shooting Wednesday.

"We already knew coming into this game that he is one of those players that can come off screens and knock down shots," sophomore forward Marques Hayden said. "Tim Ellis originally matched up with him."

Defense is what held A&M to 44.1 percent shooting. K-State has yet to allow an opponent to shoot better than 48 percent this season. Only four teams have shot better than 40 percent against the Cats.

Compared to the rest of the Big 12, here is how K-State's defense stacks up:

- First in 3-point field goal percentage defense – .279
- Second best in opponents' field goal percentage defense – .379
- Second best rebounding offense – 41.6 rebound average per game
- Wednesday night's game was only the third time in 14 games that a team had out rebounded the Wildcats. Even out rebounding defensive minded Oklahoma State 42-22.
- Fifth best in scoring defense – 62.7 points allowed per game

Regardless of what the numbers say, Coach Jim Wooldridge's team sits at a 9-5 record and after Wednesday night's win, the Wildcats are well within striking distance of the top half of the conference.

No matter games, numbers, opponents or standings, Wooldridge continues to preach improvement.

"We want to be playing as good as we can, no matter who our next opponent may be," he said.

"We want to stay healthy and consistent going into every game this season, especially during Big 12 Conference play."

K-State's Tim Ellis is fouled by Texas A&M's Acie Law while going after the ball late in the second half of Wednesday's game at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State's Nicole Ohlde grabs a rebound over Kansas' Lauren Ervin in K-State's 79-50 win Jan. 17, at Bramlage Coliseum. Ohlde was the leading scorer of the game with 20 points.

Ohlde continues to lead Wildcat women

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Coach Deb Patterson looks back at the first time star Nicole Ohlde stepped on the court as a Wildcat three years ago, she still finds herself amazed at how far Ohlde has come.

"It is absolutely one of the most remarkable stories of quick development that I've ever witnessed in coaching," Patterson said. "She literally began to learn the low post game the very first day of individuals here at Kansas State. She came into our program with a complete and total lack of understanding and knowledge about how to be a center," she added. "In one year in our program and in our gym she assumed a willingness to become a go-to player."

Ohlde is the leader for 11th ranked Wildcats.

The 6-foot-4, 175 lb. center has been able to live up to the hype and expectations that have been put on her for her final year at K-State.

Ohlde is averaging 16.2 points and 7.1 rebounds per game. The all-America center is shooting 60 percent from the field and has been a force on the defensive end.

In the season-opening loss to Purdue, Ohlde became K-State's career scoring leader. It seems every time Ohlde steps on the court, she leaves with a new team record.

Ohlde will make her 107th consecutive start for the Wildcats when K-State squares off against Nebraska on Saturday. The start will place her as fifth all time in career starts.

However, Ohlde has not let her success on the court go to her head.

Domenico's return to starting lineup brings experience to conference play

Veterans prove competitiveness, accountability in Big 12 games

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It wasn't quite the same as Michael Jordan wearing No. 45 upon his return, but junior guard Chelsea Domenico was back.

Sometimes seasoned play requires seasoned veterans.

As the Big 12 season began Jan. 7, Domenico was back in the starting lineup, replacing freshman guard Claire Coggins, who had started six consecutive games.

In 20 minutes of play, Domenico made 1-of-1 field goals and 1-of-1 free throws. She also had two rebounds and four assists, with only two turnovers.

The combination of Domenico, senior Nicole Ohlde and juniors Megan Mahoney, Laurie Koehn and Kendra Wecker has now started four consecutive games going into this weekend against Nebraska.

There was also a four-game stretch earlier this season when the five started together.

"It definitely presents a problem to the other team," Ohlde said. "People were knocking down shots from the outside. Laurie was just draining threes left and right. We had an inside presence and I think it makes it really tough.

"I think things are starting to come together."

The move shifted Mahoney from point guard to more off-the-ball play, which has allowed her more open opportunities.

In the Cats' last outing, a 79-50 victory over the University of Kansas, Mahoney had a season-high 15 points, including 3-of-4 on 3-point attempts.

"It was classic Megan Mahoney," Coach Deb Patterson said. "Kansas decided to step off and challenge her. She made the decision to shoot and make it. She got the job done and it speaks to her talent. She had a good feel for the game."

Patterson said although her veterans helped elevate the team's game, the freshmen understand their role on the team as well.

"They get a sense from the returners of the seriousness and the competitiveness of the Big 12 level," she said. "They valued the basketball and played accountable on defense. I like their serious approach to the competition.

"Their focus, purpose and understanding is good. If it continues to get better, it will make us a very good basketball team."

No matter where or when, Coggins said, she is just excited at the opportunities conference play presents.

"It's kind of like a whole new season," she said. "I know what to expect, and I know that everyone is out to beat us, but we are just going to come out and show them that they can't handle us."

Cats reaching highest potential

In team game, individuals shine in historic proportions

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a statistician's dream, th e women's basketball team has been writing and rewriting K-State records, some that have been longstanding and some that also have been recently rewritten.

From the beginning, Coach Deb Patterson has made the objectives for her players and their season very clear.

"The goal here is that they would reach their highest potential but they would always and constantly have fun doing it," Patterson said. "In order to have fun you can't be carrying around this constant burden and pressure. It's important in the personalities of players to have fun."

That mantra has led the Wildcats to a 13-2 start.

Individually, these humble Cats aren't too eager to talk about their personal accolades:

SCORING

With more titles than the New York Yankees, senior Nicole Ohlde already eclipsed Diana Miller's 13-year-old record of career scoring during the first game of the year at Purdue. Averaging 16.2 points a game, Ohlde needs 174 points to eclipse K-State's all-time mark for men or women.

She is currently second only to Mike Evans on that list. Junior Megan Mahoney is 121 points shy of joining the 1,000-point club, which junior Laurie Koehn joined earlier this season.

Zach Long | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Megan Mahoney looks for a teammate while being pressured by Purdue's Shereka Wright during the Wildcats' loss to the Boilermakers in West Lafayette, Ind. Mahoney is closing in on K-State's career mark for assists.

REBOUNDING

Carlisa Thomas capped her career in 1987 as the all-time leader in rebounds with 923. Ohlde is 29 shy of the record. Should she pull down 106 more (her season total so far is 107), she would become the first woman at K-State to break the 1,000-rebound mark.

Big 12 boasts most teams in AP women's basketball poll

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Big 10 has four teams.

The SEC has also has four.

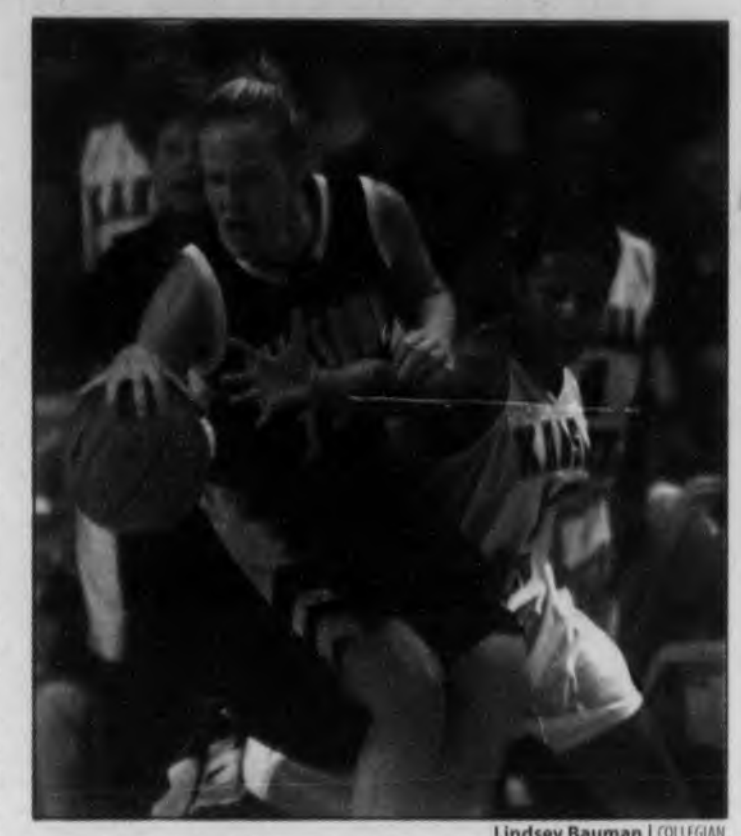
The Big East came close, with five.

But no one has more teams in this week's AP Top 25, than the Big 12, which boasts six teams, including three in the Top 10.

Texas Tech leads the way at the No. 2 spot, they are No. 1 in the ESPN/USA Today poll. Texas is No. 3 and K-State is 10th.

Colorado and Oklahoma are tied for 15th.

Baylor, after its 14-point upset of Texas Jan. 14, snuck in this week landing in the No. 24 spot.



K-State remains the only undefeated team in the conference at 4-0, while six other teams also have records of 13 wins or better, the best of any conference in the country.

As most teams concluded their non-conference slate, among the major conferences, the Big 12 boasted the best non-conference record winning 113 games while losing only 27.

Iowa State, after shocking then-No. 1 Texas Tech last week, upended No. 15 Oklahoma in Ames, Iowa, on Tuesday, 69-51.

"Obviously, the game comes down to making shots. We shot the ball well in the second half," Iowa State coach Bill Fennelly said. "I thought our kids did a great job of managing the game."

OU hosts Baylor on Saturday while Missouri makes a trip west to Lawrence for Border War II. The contest will be the first time the two teams have faced each other since Jan. 10, when a scuffle broke out after KU's 55-52 win.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

The fight caused the Big 12 conference to suspend a total of four players, three from KU and one from Missouri, for one game.

"There is no place for this kind of activity in college sports," Big 12 Commissioner Kevin Weibergsaid. "We appreciate the two institutions and their athletic directors for taking prompt action in this matter."

University of Kansas Athletic Director Lew Perkins and University of Missouri Athletic Director Mike Alden, in a joint statement, said they both regretted the actions of their institutions.

"We have spoken to our administrators, to our coaches and to our student-athletes. We both encourage sporting behavior and support the Big 12 Conference's Code of Conduct. We will do our best to ensure that everyone involved in our athletics programs behave in a manner that brings credit to themselves, intercollegiate athletics, the conference and our universities. We expect our fans to do the same."

Surprise wins, losses highlight first half of men's Big 12 conference season

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"That's why they play the game."

It's a popular phrase used by many in the sports world to explain why so many times the way a team appears on paper does not translate into success on the playing field.

So far the Big 12 men's basketball campaign is providing the perfect example.

Heading into the season, talk concerning a Big 12 title centered around the "big 4" – Kansas, Missouri, Texas and Oklahoma.

While Kansas (11-2, 3-0) and Texas (12-2, 3-0) have held up their end of the expectations, Oklahoma (10-4, 0-3) and Missouri (7-7, 2-2) have sputtered.

Since starting the season 3-0, the Tigers have failed to put together consecutive wins, losing not just to high-quality opponents like Gonzaga and Syracuse but also to the likes of Belmont.

Although picked No. 1 in the preseason Big 12 coaches poll, the Tigers have had to battle their own inconsistent, underachieving play all the while with the cloud of the Ricky Clemons' scandal – and a NCAA investigation – over their heads.

Many of the Tigers' losses have been by close margins, including Tuesday's 75-69 defeat in overtime at the hands of Texas.

Texas Brian Boddicker hit a 3-pointer in the closing seconds to send the game into overtime. The play summed up the season so far for Missouri's Rickey Paulding.

"It was a tough break for us," Paulding said. "It's been kind of like that for us through the whole season."

After achieving a 10-0 start, the Sooners were subsequently rocked by Connecticut and Oklahoma State and lost a heartbreaker at home to Missouri.

On Monday, they were dominated by Texas Tech, 67-47.

The four-game losing streak is Oklahoma's longest in five years, and the 0-3 conference start is the Sooners' worst since the 1980-81 season.

"(Before) the last eight days, we were 10-0, right?" Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson said. "We've just got to get a lot tougher, a lot better."

Picked seventh in the preseason coaches and media polls, the Red Raiders(15-2, 3-0) have opened conference play with blowouts of Oklahoma State and Oklahoma earning them a place at the top of the Big 12 with Kansas and Texas.

Since a 62-59 loss on Dec. 1, Texas Tech has reeled off 11 consecutive wins.

As the Red Raiders are seen as the Big 12's biggest surprise, the Iowa State Cyclones (10-3, 2-1) are quietly competing for that distinction.

The team – mired in offseason controversy centered around the end of the Larry Eustachy era – has had an excellent start to the season under Coach Wayne Morgan.

The Cyclones have been unbeatable at home, going undefeated at Hilton Coliseum defeating Missouri and Nebraska (10-4, 0-3) among others.

Other teams off to a solid start are Eddie Sutton's Oklahoma State Cowboys (12-2, 2-1) and the Colorado Buffaloes (10-4, 2-1).

The Cowboys started the season 10-1 while the Buffaloes have bounced back from a three-game losing streak early in the year and have won two in a row.

Meanwhile, nothing much has changed for the other two Texas schools – Texas A&M and Baylor.

Both appear to be the bottom-feeders of the conference, as the Aggies (7-6,0-2) have yet to win a Big 12 contest and the Bears continue to feel the repercussions of the Dave Bliss scandal.

So as the season passes the halfway point, things are starting to gradually take shape in the Big 12.

However, with the bulk of the conference season still ahead many more storylines are set to emerge.

Veteran coach Knight knows all too well that the fortunes of a team can turn for better or worse in a hurry.

"Who knows?" Knight said following the Oklahoma victory.

"We could be as different tomorrow as black and white or as apples and watermelons. You just have to continue to be focused and play was well as you can."

RECORDS | Women continue to add more records to their collection

3-POINT FIELD GOALS

Koehn needs 39 more for the all-time record and 100 more attempts to own both records.

ASSISTS

Mahoney is six away from sole possession of second place and 169 from first. She is averaging 4.8 per game.

BLOCKS

While all-time leader Ohlde has nearly doubled Olga Firsova's record of 100, junior Brie Madden is 23 blocks away from second place and 22 blocks from becoming only the third player in history to have 100 blocks in her career.

TRIPLE-DOUBLES

Mahoney recorded the second in the history of K-State women's basketball Dec. 6 against Saint Louis.

DOUBLE-DOUBLES

Ohlde and junior Kendra Wecker are first and second, respectively, in this category with Ohlde posting 38 and Wecker 29.

The difference here is that while Ohlde has whatever is left of the season to add more records to her already vast and impressive collection, Koehn, Madden, Mahoney and Wecker have the rest of this season and all of next season to accomplish their feats.

"There is no greater sense of urgency in our program than that which has made this program over the past three years and that is to be the best we can be," Patterson said earlier in the season about her squad.

OHLDE | Patterson proud of senior's successful performance

I've had have been incredible," Ohlde said. "A lot of people don't get to have this opportunity, and I'm very thankful that I have. It's just awesome."

Last year's Big 12 conference player of the year stands as the only Wildcat to have 1,000 points, 500 rebounds, 200 assists and 100 blocks.

Ohlde is coming off a 20-point, nine-rebound performance against rival Kansas when the Wildcats dominated the Jayhawks 79-50 on Saturday. Ohlde will need a similar performance if the Wildcats hope to stay unbeaten in conference play when K-State faces the Huskers on Saturday.

Patterson is confident that her star player will continue to lead her squad.

"To me, she's the queen. She's the killer," Patterson said.

"She's the one that's involved with everything. She's the centerpiece. She's versatile. You better watch out, because she's deceptive how she attacks you, a lot of people misunderstand just how incredible she is."

U.S. helicopter crashes in Iraq, 2 soldiers missing

By Paul Garwood
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TIKRIT, Iraq – A U.S. helicopter crashed in the Tigris River while searching for a missing soldier on Sunday, and the aircraft's two crew members were missing, the military said. It did not say what caused the crash of the OH-58D Kiowa Warrior helicopter attached to the 101st Airborne Division.

The helicopter was searching for a soldier missing when the boat he was in capsized earlier Sunday while on patrol. The other three soldiers in the boat were safe, but two Iraqi police officers and an Iraqi translator were confirmed killed in the incident, said Maj. Josslyn Aberle, a spokeswoman for the 4th Infantry Division.

She said the search for the two pilots was underway. U.S. troops and Iraqi police sealed off the area and established checkpoints to secure the search and rescue operation.

U.S. troops rushing to the scene came under "limited and ineffective small arms fire," the spokeswoman said. An Iraqi policeman manning one of the checkpoints was killed in a drive-by shooting, witnesses said.

It was the fifth helicopter crash in Iraq this month – three of them due to hostile fire.

U.S. troops arrested nearly 50 people Sunday in raids in the Sunni Triangle after attacks in the volatile region killed six American soldiers.

Most of the arrests occurred in Baqouba, 35 miles northeast of Baghdad, where 46 people were detained in a series of raids, the U.S. military said. Three were arrested for alleged anti-coalition activities and the rest for illegal weapons possession.

Soldiers of the 4th Infantry Division also seized 220 hand grenades in a raid on a house in the town of Mukayshifa, located south of Saddam Hussein's hometown Tikrit, according to spokeswoman Maj. Josslyn Aberle.

The raids in the Sunni heartland followed a series of bombings and attacks Saturday in which six soldiers were killed. One of them, from the 4th Infantry Division, died Sunday of wounds suffered when insurgents fired a rocket propelled grenade at his Bradley vehicle in Beiji on Saturday.

Five other U.S. soldiers were killed in two separate bombings Saturday in Khaldiyah and Fallujah, both located in the Euphrates River valley west of the capital. A blast Saturday in Samarra to the north of Baghdad narrowly missed an American convoy but killed four Iraqis and wounded about 40 others, including seven Americans.

Icy weather postpones Daschle's lecture today

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Landon Lecture scheduled for today has been postponed because of weather conditions.

Tom Daschle, Senate minority leader, was scheduled to speak at 9:30 a.m. today. However, because of icy conditions, he will not be able to fly in, according to a K-State press release.

As of Sunday afternoon, the Air Traffic Control System Command Center was reporting delays of up to 45 minutes at Kansas City International Airport.

Weather conditions were expected to worsen Sunday night and Monday morning, as more freezing rain and light snow were expected.

K-State officials plan to reschedule the lecture and announce the new date this week.

Country singer energizes Bramlage fans

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With songs about cowboys, drinking and American pride, Toby Keith turned Bramlage Coliseum into a rowdy country music hall Saturday night.

Giving a rousing and energetic performance, Keith didn't disappoint the all-ages audience that came to see him.

"It was better than I thought it was going to be," said concert attendee Cory Smith, a senior at Northwest Missouri State University.

"I didn't know his stage presence was going to be that good. It definitely exceeded my expectations."

With his boyish grin and carefree attitude, Keith was able to whip the crowd into a frenzy with just a tip of his hat. Keeping up with his good ol' boy reputation, Keith kept the crowd engaged and enthusiastic with stories of life on the tour bus and drinking anecdotes between songs.

Fans were clapping their hands and dancing in the aisles to Keith's lighthearted and humorous hits, including "Who's Your Daddy?" and "I'm Just Talking About Tonight."

"The energy level was just really high for all of his songs," Helen West, freshman in secondary education said. "Especially the drinking songs."

Songs like "Beer for My Horses" and "I Love This Bar" got the crowd going, as fans sang along and lifted imaginary beer mugs into the air with every chorus. Wild applause and shouting from the crowd followed each set.

The concert seemed to take a more serious note when Keith performed his two songs "American Soldier" and "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)." Bursting with the patriotism he's famous for, Keith sang the songs for which he has received both praise and criticism.

Winter storm leaves residents without power

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A representative from Westar Energy reported they have received more than 20,000 calls from Manhattan and the surrounding area regarding power problems.

Arlen Loecker, battalion chief at the Manhattan Fire Department, said power was out in areas south and east of the K-State campuses intermittently Sunday. Loecker said the older neighborhoods to the south and east of campus have more trees which pose a greater possibility of limbs falling on power lines.

"Our calls have been mostly on the east side of town," Loecker said. "We have been to Northview and downtown areas two or three times today."

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Dean hits the campaign trail

John Kerry might have walked away with the Iowa caucus victory, but it's Howard Dean who is making the headlines.

We'll let the speech speak for itself:

"Not only are we going to New Hampshire ..., we're going to South Carolina and Oklahoma and Arizona and North Dakota and New Mexico, and we're going to California and Texas and New York. And we're going to South Dakota and Oregon and Washington and Michigan. And then we're going to Washington, D.C., to take back the White House. YEAHHHH!!!"

Paul Sancya | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Democratic presidential hopeful Howard Dean addresses supporters Tuesday at the New Hampshire Technical Institute in Concord, N.H. Organized labor is taking a hard look at its political operations after the two union-backed candidates that were supposed to dominate Iowa — Dean and Richard Gephardt — sank instead.

PRESIDENT BUSH IS NOT AMERICA'S IDOL

Meanwhile, more Americans tuned in for the second episode of this season's "American Idol" than for President Bush's State of the Union address Tuesday night.

Paula Abdul, Randy Jackson and Simon Cowell returned to the gloves-off judging table to continue the long process of narrowing down America's next soon-to-be-a-has-been artist. So far, 60 million viewers have tuned in to "Idol" this season.

JACKO DANCES HIS WAY OUT OF COURT

Jackson

News flash: There is something wrong with Michael Jackson.

Or rather, officials in charge of courthouse security seem to think so. Security teams called for a new plan after last week's episode that had Jackson showing happy feet.

Upon leaving the courthouse, Jackson jumped on top of his SUV and sported moves that have made the King of Pop famous.

STEWART PLEADS INNOCENT

Stewart

In other celebrity court news, Martha Stewart pleaded innocent at the formal start to her trial last week.

She climbed the courthouse steps and briefly waved to two fans standing in the freezing cold, including a man wearing a "Save Martha" chef's hat and matching apron.

RED ROVER, RED ROVER, SEND SPIRIT RIGHT OVER

Scenario: earth-born robot placed on a planet with limited oxygen, constant cloudy skies and sub-zero temperatures that would put the East Coast to shame. What could go wrong?

Last week, NASA's rover Spirit stopped sending data, thus crashing many hopes of scientists and putting space skeptics to work on anti-Bush legislation.

However, shortly after the second rover, Opportunity, landed, Spirit sent back a few images. NASA officials have upgraded Spirit's condition from "critical" to "serious."

FORMER CHIEFS DEFENSIVE COORDINATOR RE-HIRED

Cunningham

Three years ago, Cunningham learned of his firing as the Chiefs' head coach and the hiring of his replacement Dick Vermeil while he sat in his Arrowhead Stadium office surfing the Internet.

A teary-eyed Dick Vermeil, going into his fourth year, said he knew "Gun" was his man.

RAISE YOUR GLASSES TO PRESIDENT BUSH

There was nothing new to President Bush's State of the Union speech.

But according to National Public Radio, to make it exciting, some college students created a State of the Union drinking game.

Among some of the rules: If Bush attempts to make a joke, anybody who laughs drinks three shots of beer.

HOW TO

Drive safely on slick roads

As winter weather causes the roads to become dangerous, drivers should be aware of how to control their vehicles and avoid serious accidents.

DRIVING SAFELY ON ICY ROADS

- Decrease your speed and leave yourself plenty of room to stop. You should allow at least three times more space than usual between you and the car in front of you.
- Brake gently to avoid skidding. If your wheels start to lock up, ease off the brake pedal.
- Turn on your lights to increase your visibility to other motorists.
- Use low gears to maintain traction, especially on hills.
- Don't use cruise control or overdrive on icy roads.
- Be careful on bridges, overpasses and infrequently traveled roads, which freeze first. Even at temperatures above freezing, you might encounter ice.
- Don't pass snow plows and sanding trucks. The drivers have limited visibility, and you are likely to find the road in front of them worse than the road behind.
- Don't assume your vehicle can handle all conditions. Even four-wheel and front-wheel drive vehicles can encounter trouble on winter roads.

IF YOUR REAR WHEELS SKID

- Take your foot off the accelerator.
- Steer in the direction you want the front wheels to go.
- If your rear wheels start sliding the other way as you recover, ease the steering wheel toward that side. You might have to steer left and right a few times to get your vehicle completely under control.
- If you have standard brakes, pump them gently.
- If you have anti-lock brakes, do not pump the brakes. Apply steady pressure to the brakes. You will feel the brakes pulse – this is normal.

IF YOUR FRONT WHEELS SKID

- Take your foot off the gas and shift to neutral, but don't try to steer immediately.
- As the wheels skid sideways, they will slow the vehicle. Steer in the direction you want to go. Then put the transmission in "drive," or release the clutch, and accelerate gently.

IF YOU GET STUCK

- Do not spin your wheels. This will only dig you in deeper.
- Turn your wheels from side to side a few times to push snow out of the way.
- Use a light touch on the gas to ease your car out.
- Use a shovel to clear snow away from the wheels.
- Pour sand, kitty litter, gravel or salt in the path of the wheels to help get traction.

Ice storm causes cancellations Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Freezing drizzle, sleet and snow fell Sunday across parts of Kansas, coating roads with ice and canceling church services.

The Kansas Highway Patrol said the icy conditions played a role in several accidents, including a fatal crash on U.S. 183 near Hays that killed a Colorado man.

In the Kansas City area, about 30 vehicles were stranded briefly overnight Sunday on an ice-covered Interstate 70 bridge that spans the Kansas-Missouri state line.

Traffic resumed moving after ice trucks treated the bridge. Several fender-benders contributed to the traffic snarl, said Steve Hoskins, a supervisor in the Kansas City 911 center.

A patrol dispatcher said there were a handful of reports of vehicles sliding off the side of the road or into barrier walls on the Kansas Turnpike.

The storm moved into the state about midnight Saturday, bringing freezing rain to northeast and north-central Kansas.

Rain fell across much of the rest of the state, said Matt Wolters, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

Wolters said there were isolated reports of downed limbs and power lines in northeast Kansas.

"I don't think the damage is as extensive as it was a couple years ago," he said of the January 2002 ice storms that caused more than $70 million in damage.

Wolters said a second storm was expected to move into the state late Sunday, bringing snow.

Accumulations ranging from an inch in the south to as much as 4 inches in the north were expected by the time the snow stops falling Monday morning or afternoon.

After Monday, dry conditions were forecast through the end of the week.

It is nice to know that with the costs of tuition and other student fees going up, the university is giving its students something free.

Beginning this semester, Computing and Network Services will allot $10 of free printing to each enrolled student.

This equals 100 black and white pages or 13 color pages – which will help any student working from campus computer labs.

With student privilege fees and tuition rates increasing each academic year, students' bank accounts are feeling the strain.

The university should give something back to its students who are already putting thousands of dollars a semester into their college education.

Along with the $10 of free printing, the university should consider allotting other monetary gifts to its students, such as a specified number of free official transcripts or discounts on syllabi or lab manuals at the university's copy centers.

Such gifts would make students feel appreciated and welcomed – much like the family environment K-State strives to create.

TUESDAY'S OPINIONS

BARBARA MEYER

Barbara Meyer examines the recent actions of the University of Colorado's conservative students and related legislature.

JONATHAN LAMB

Pro-maturity

Young mothers should have parental permission before abortions

Fourteen-year-old Mary is devastated.

Three months into her freshman year of high school, she has become pregnant. Ben, the father, is an 18-year-old senior whom her parents dislike.

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

Mary is terrified.

Her devout Catholic parents will be crushed when she confesses her pregnancy. Mary confides in Ben, who suggests an abortion. She knows her parents will never grant her permission to terminate the pregnancy.

Mary lives in Pennsylvania, where notification of a parent or guardian is required for her to obtain an abortion. However, Ben circumvents this obstacle by driving Mary across state lines to New Jersey, where parental consent is not required.

Mary obtains the abortion in New Jersey.

Ten years later, Mary is battling post-traumatic stress disorder as a result of the abortion she received as a teenager. Aside from the physical side effects the abortion caused, the mental trauma to her immature psyche has altered her life.

Although Mary's situation is simply an imagined example, the death of the Child Custody Protection Act in the Senate last year causes this scenario to become a reality.

According to the Reproductive Rights Web site, 44 states have adopted laws requiring a minor to obtain the consent or notify her parents prior to an abortion. However, in nine of these states the laws are enjoined or not enforced. In Kansas, minors must obtain permission except in the case of medical emergency or incest.

The American Family Association Journal states the Child Custody Protection Act would prevent any adult other than a parent, except in the case of judicial authorization, from taking a minor across state lines to circumvent laws requiring the involvement of parents in abortion decisions.

Abortion is a heated debate. Pro-life groups say it is murder and pro-choice groups say it is a woman's choice. However, no matter what fundamental belief legislators and their constituents hold, it is the job of parents to protect their children.

Sometimes this requires protecting young people from themselves and what potentially could be a destructive decision.

Groups such as the ACLU and the Center for Reproductive Rights oppose the Child Custody Protection Act, touting the "rights" of minors. With this claim they grossly ignore the right of a minor to be protected by his or her parents.

This right includes restraining a child from making potentially destructive decisions.

Exceptions to this rule would be incest and abuse. However, within the current law, which requires parent notification, there are allowances for judicial intervention that override parental consent to abortion in the cases of incest and abuse.

Whether you are pro-life or pro-choice, Democrat or Republican, you should push legislators to protect the rights of children by supporting the Child Custody Protection Act.

Women who make the choice to have an abortion are faced with a moral, physical and life-altering decision. These women should have the opportunity to obtain the best health care, time for healing and support from loved ones. A 14-year-old girl does not have the maturity or resources to make this decision on her own.

As voting adults and parents, it is our responsibility to protect our nation's children, whether it be from others or themselves.

Reforms needed to reduce annual tax rates

I am about to say something conservatives have been saying and liberals have been denying for years.

Taxes are too high.

JESSE LOEWEN

Consider a homeowner whose annual income is $45,000: The homeowner pays roughly one-third of his or her annual salary in federal income tax, or $15,000. Add to that a state income tax of $2,505, personal property tax of a couple grand, and sales tax around 7 percent. Before you know it, more than half your annual salary has been spent paying taxes.

The United States operates on a graduate taxing scale. The more money you make, the greater the percentage of your income that goes to taxes. If you make a lot of money, you wind up paying up to 50 percent of your income in federal income taxes alone. That is why it appears as though the rich benefit more from tax cuts than the rest of us.

If you are a middle-income American, you lose more than half of the money you make per year to taxes. The more money you make, the more you pay.

Personally, I think there is something wrong when half the money I will be making by working 40 to 60 hours a week disappears in the form of taxes, but then again I understand the need.

Taxes are the means by which federal and state governments provide for the public what the public cannot provide for itself. Roads, schools, parks, police forces, fire departments, national security, land-grant universities, Pell grants, anything NASA does and dozens of other things we take for granted.

Despite everything for which taxes are used to pay and all the public good that is done with them, we are paying way too much.

Of course, the moment someone mentions cutting taxes, liberals immediately begin mumbling incoherent statements about the cost to our children's future, the rising deficit, lower quality of education and bankrupting the state.

However, not a single one of these projections actually has to happen. Government spending, being unchecked by any higher power, is conducted with complete freedom of accountability. How else can we explain the deficit in California, the most prosperous state in this country?

It is obvious by the high price we pay for taxes, coupled with the ridiculously high deficits we have, that our tax dollars are being wasted.

Government workers provide a specific example – they are notoriously difficult to terminate when they fail to perform.

At one point during his presidency, President Bush advocated putting roughly 800,000 government jobs into the private sector. Once in the private sector, these jobs would disappear as the tasks were made more efficient and less costly, and the displaced workers would move on to other positions.

The workers who loafed on the job would be deservingly fired, and the cost of the tasks being performed by an army of government employees would be dramatically reduced.

At $50,000 per year for each employee, the savings could easily break $10 billion with no loss of service to the American people.

Requiring people on welfare to work at least 40 hours a week and subsidizing their childcare could save millions as well.

These are just two examples of areas in the budget where money can be saved and returned to the people in the form of tax cuts.

Considering the gross deficits across this country and the tremendous amount of money that goes to our government every year, similar reforms on every level should reduce what we pay in yearly taxes by nearly half and reduce the deficit in the process.

I want to know where in the world the College Sports Illustrated is in the newspaper.

I was just wondering how prairie bison can be an intelligent substitution for cattle when they have a smaller brain.

If you want us to put our opinions in about issues, maybe you guys should write something about issues rather than what the rules should be on the Fourum.

I just bought three books for $110 off KSUbooks.com. That's less than the price of one of them at the other place.

I love this town. I got lost at City Park this morning — it was great!

Can somebody on this campus answer this question for once and for all? If a guy gets you drunk, and then he has sex with you and forces it on you without your permission, is that called rape?

If Nasrina turns into the Fourum nazi, I'm transferring.

How shameless is Vice President Cheney? Not only does his former company get most of the rebuilding contracts in Iraq, but now he is trying to influence the Supreme Court justice before the Court decides on a law against him.

Why won't the Bush administration give the federal panel investigating the 9/11 tragedy the documents it is requesting?

What is the Bush administration hiding?

I figured out why the world is getting fatter — it's because people take the elevator up one floor over in Bluemont Hall.

I think it's great that conservative Kansas State finally got a Democrat to come and speak, but did they have to schedule it in the middle of classes?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Justice served in Roberson incident

Editor,

I am writing in response to the gentleman from Ohio that wrote to criticize who Coach Bill Snyder. Clearly, the Ohio State alumnus has a well-substantiated point and some definite opinions about the situation that occurred during the Fiesta Bowl week. However, this individual obviously has not heard of or read about Snyder's open letter of apology about the incident (which can easily be found on the Internet).

I simply wanted to ease some minds and hearts of others who read the Ohio native's letter and have not had the opportunity to hear about what our coach had to say.

So I ask that you hear me out while I try to defend one of the greatest college football coaches this country has ever seen.

Upon hearing of the occurrences that played out during New Year's Eve, Snyder stated that he "was at peace" with the decision to send Roberson and other violators home that evening, and subsequently they would not have participated in the Fiesta Bowl.

However, he learned of the details surrounding the incident and decided against these rash consequences that would not have been justified given the severity of the actions.

The news media caught wind of the false reports and blew the whole situation out of proportion. Clearly, justice prevailed as the ramifications have rained down hard upon Roberson and others, who will not receive their spring semester scholarship money and Fiesta Bowl rings.

One can only come to the conclusion that this coach is a man of great moral character and high ethical standards. I think our future football players will consider their actions and the consequences that could ensue because of bad decisions thanks to attention given to this situation.

Further, I do commend Ohio State University on its rulings in the Maurice Clarett case. Obviously, the evidence was clear, and the actions following the matter were swift and just.

The Buckeyes did have a tremendous football team this past season, and popular opinion would support that Clarett helped the team reach its repeat National Championship goals.

I believe in both aforementioned circumstances, justice and integrity triumphed. Decisions in either case would have been difficult, but the correct judgments were attained.

Thank you for your input, Mr. Ohio State Buckeye Alumnus, and best of luck to you next season, lest you forget that we have a pretty good sprite of a running back of our own – Darren Sproles.

Parking Services billing alumna for past tickets

Editor,

I am writing to inform the readers of the Collegian about a new Parking Services initiative that might be tarnishing the reputation of K-State in the eyes of alumni.

It appears that in order to generate more revenue, Parking Services is trying to collect parking fines from tickets that are three or more years old.

They are sending statements to former students who have already graduated and received their degrees, and who have already paid vast amounts of money to the university and probably to Parking Services as well.

They don't even seem to care that they might be sending tickets to people who did not commit the parking infractions.

I am one of these victims.

Parking Services sent me a statement in August 2003 for a parking ticket originally issued in February of 2000.

I informed them that the license plate and type of car listed on the ticket were not mine, but they insisted that I pay it anyway.

I further informed them I was studying abroad in Queretaro, Mexico, from January to June of 2000 and could not possibly have received a parking ticket during that time.

However, they continue to mail me monthly statements with interest.

It's truly insulting that to try to scrounge up extra cash, Parking Services would pin tickets received by unknown persons on alumna.

I wonder if other alumni will be as generous in donating to the KSU Foundation as they have been in the past, considering they are being hounded for money they do not owe.

I know I won't be giving to the Foundation this year for that very reason.

Fans to blame for celebrity news frenzy

By Sara Ganus
OKLAHOMA DAILY (U. OKLAHOMA)

NORMAN, Okla. – So you like to sleep with children?

OK, sure. I've heard that one before. You're dating somebody that could be your mom? That's cool. So are Ashton and Justin. And you said you and your boyfriend taped yourselves having sex, and now it's being sold over the Internet? Must be nice.

Too bad it's only three minutes long. Maybe then you might actually have a chance at a music career.

Do any of these scenarios sound familiar to you? Because lately, it is all I've heard. I can't do anything, I can't watch anything, and I can't read anything I haven't already heard or even anything that I care about.

I don't know how many times I've turned to VH1 just to hear that obnoxious Robin Leach-wannabe talk about the Hilton sisters and their "fabulous lives" or flipped to MTV to see they're airing the episode where that sweet Southern belle mistook fish for chicken.

Who really cares that Britney got married to her hometown sweetheart and accidentally "took a joke too far"?

It doesn't matter what they do, you still don't get tired of them. In fact, you can't get enough of them.

What I don't understand is why. Why do you give them the attention they crave? Haven't you noticed they'll do anything to get it from you? As much as you hate to admit it, you do it unconditionally. You idolize them. You want to be them.

You hate to love them. Worse, you give them all the attention they think they deserve.

I say, who cares? Who really cares that Britney got married to her hometown sweetheart and accidentally "took a joke too far"? It was annulled. That means it's over. But apparently you don't believe it.

You won't leave it alone. Honestly, I don't even care that Michael Jackson has moved into a 37,000-square-foot mansion in Beverly Hills because Neverland just "isn't a home anymore." Poor baby. And for the love of God, Clay Aiken, just a little FYI: You're not invisible, but I wish you were. You really messed up this time. Again, this all comes back to you.

I really do blame all of this on you. I blame you for all the magazines that are bought.

I blame you for all the albums that are sold.

I even blame you for the movies that are watched.

It is you who are encouraging their behavior. It's you who are buying into their self-involved worlds of fame and fortune.

It's you who refuse to live your own life instead of vicariously through theirs.

They're people. Just like you. So give up the celebrity charade. Don't live your life through them.

Then I'll stop blaming you.

Republican Congress, Bush to blame for large deficits

By Michael Link
FSVIEW & FLORIDA FLAMBEAU
(FLORIDA STATE U.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. – I am not a big fan of Howard Dean, but he is absolutely right – you can no longer trust Republicans with your money.

The Bush administration, which has not vetoed a single spending bill, and the Republican Congress have raised spending to historic levels.

Even the conservative Heritage Foundation is speaking out against the administration for spending about $20,000 per family – the most per family since World War II.

This is the part where Republicans cry out, "But you can't blame Bush for an increase in spending because of Sept. 11, 2001."

However, increases for Homeland Security amount to only 2 percent of total federal spending. We also cannot blame our optional war in Iraq, as non-defense discretionary spending has grown as well.

All this spending has led to massive deficits. We went from a $236 billion surplus during the Clinton administration to $400 billion deficits with the Bush administration.

For this reason, it should be obvious that Bush raised taxes on all of us, instead of the tax cuts he promised.

When the government increases spending, they increase our debt, which will be paid with taxes. Essentially, it is a long-run tax increase that Bush put on our credit card to be paid (with interest) at a later time.

Loss of focus

Cats suffer most lopsided defeat since 2002

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One-third of the Big 12's top-10 ranked teams collapsed this week.

"Any time you come into a game, and you're not focused and ready to play, you're going to get your rear kicked all over the floor, and we definitely did that today," junior forward Kendra Wecker said.

"We weren't focused, we weren't competitive, and we got beat in every phase of the game possible."

K-State fell to Nebraska, 63-81.

Wecker led the Wildcats, scoring 21 points and grabbing seven rebounds.

The Huskers' athletic offense and stingy defense outmatched the Cats, out rebounding K-State 42-32 and keeping the Cats to 33.3 percent shooting from the field.

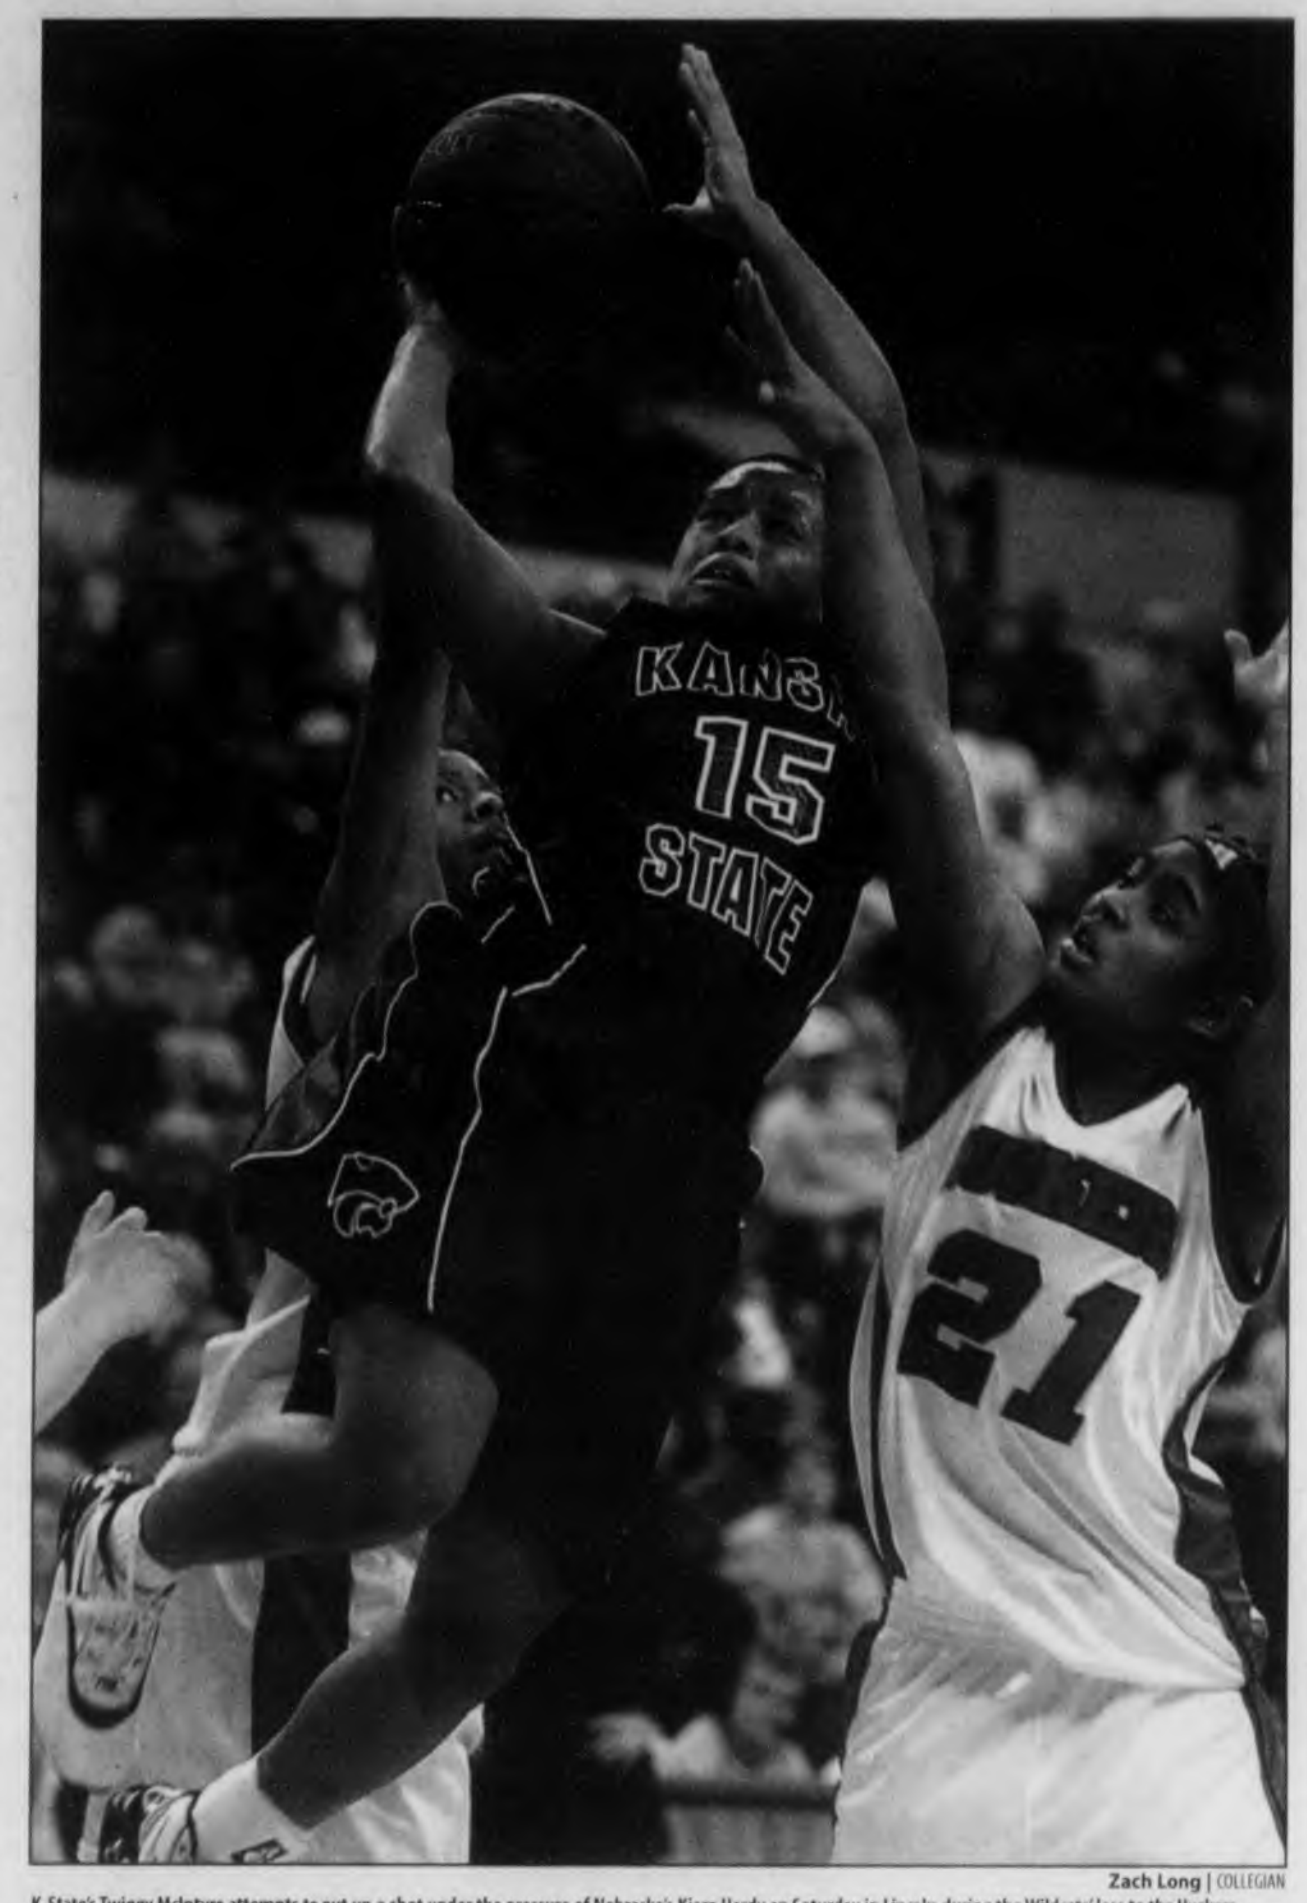
"We could not have followed our plan any better today. I would have never guessed in a million years that we'd beat K-State by 20 today."

In the post, the Huskers' double and sometimes triple teams held senior center Nicole Ohlde to just 14 points on 5-of-16 shooting. Ohlde also had four rebounds in the game while committing a team-high four turnovers.

"They did a good job of doubling and trapping and that kind of stuff, but I need to make my shots," Ohlde said.



"Their double teams were effective, they were coming from different angles at different times. That's something I need to continue to improve on and just stay focused and not let anything get to my head."

This was the first conference loss of the season for K-State. Nebraska got its fourth conference victory this year, the first in a stretch that includes five consecutive games against ranked conference foes.

"I believe we were just outplayed in every facet of the game across the board," Coach Deb Patterson said.

"Nebraska played very confident, very aggressive and we did not respond. We did not compete well on any front.

"There is not one area of the game in which I think we're satisfied with our performance, and I imagine Nebraska feels exactly the opposite.

Domenico recovering from neck strain, bruised nose

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior guard Chelsea Domenico is recovering after suffering a neck strain and bruised nose after chasing a rebound and catching a forearm to the head in the first half against Nebraska on Saturday.

With about 13 minutes remaining in the half, Domenico took an inadvertent elbow in the forehead from Nebraska center Katie Morse.

The blow snapped back Domenico's head and caused her to drop to the floor. The junior guard tried to get up only to fall down again. The game was delayed about nine minutes as medical personnel stabilized her neck.

As a precaution, Domenico was carried out of the Bob Devaney Sports Center on a stretcher and was examined at a local hospital in Lincoln.

After the game, Coach Deb Patterson said Domenico was expected to recover.

"I understand she is OK in terms of her spine and neck and bones," Patterson said. "She is, however, having serious spasms in her neck and back and is very sore."

When asked if the injury contributed to K-State's loss, Patterson was quick to respond.

"I don't believe it had an effect on the game, Patterson said. "I believe we were outplayed in every facet of the game across the board. Nebraska played very confident, very aggressive, and we did not respond. We did not compete well on any front."

"I don't think the injury was a big factor in our play," Mahoney said. "We were definitely concerned for her, if anything that should have motivated us to keep playing."

Prior to the injury, Domenico, K-State's starting point guard, played only seven minutes against the Huskers and had two rebounds in the Wildcats 81-63 loss to the Huskers.

Wildcat men lose 18th consecutive Big 12 road game

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team was unable to overcome 14 first-half turnovers in a 61-49 loss to No. 20 Oklahoma, Saturday in Norman, Okla.

The loss was the 18th consecutive conference road loss for K-State (9-6, 1-3). Oklahoma (11-5, 1-3) snapped a four-game losing streak and gained its first Big 12 Conference win of the season.

The Sooners were able to create 21 total turnovers with a 2-3 zone defense that affected every aspect of the Wildcats' game, Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

"We were very inefficient on the offensive end, and any time you struggle like that on offense, it impacts the whole game– how you defend, how you rebound, how you get back down the floor– everything," Wooldridge said.

Senior guard Frank Richards turned the ball over six times and had zero points while running the Wildcat's offense. Junior forward Jeremiah Massey also contributed to the turnover total with six of his own. The Wildcats finished the game with more turnovers than field goals (18).

Although K-State only turned the ball over seven times in the second half, the Sooners, with an 8-0 run, pushed the lead to 19 and never looked back.

Senior Oklahoma guard Jason Detrick was the only player for the Sooners to score in double digits and led all scorers with 24 points on 8- of-14 shooting from the field.

K-State also had only one player in double digits, senior guard Jarrett Hart. Hart finished with 16 points, going 5-of-10 from the field. The game at the Lloyd Noble Center also was a homecoming for Hart, who played for the Sooners during the 1999-2000 season.

Hart said he tried not to concentrate on the homecoming.

"I just tried to come in and treat it like any other game," he said. "My teammates knew that, and we were just trying to fight to get the win."

The only real bright spot for the Wildcats was holding the Sooners to 36 percent from the field. K-State now has held every opponent to less than 48 percent shooting this season.

Even though Oklahoma came away with the win, the Sooners learned the night before the game that its top rebounder, sophomore forward Kevin Bookout, will miss the remainder of the season after deciding to have surgery on his injured shoulder.

Coach Kelvin Sampson said Bookout was a leader and expects him to be back next season.

"He's really been an emotional inspiration. He'll have surgery and be back this summer and be 100 percent for next season," Sampson said.

WBB | Koehn in running for Lieberman award

Koehn

Junior Laurie Koehn was named an early candidate for the Nancy Lieberman Award, on Sunday.

The award is given annually by the Detroit Rotary Club to the nation's top women's point guard in Division I.

Koehn ranks third in the nation in 3-point field goals per game with a 3.5 average. She has made 54 3-pointers during the season to lead the Wildcats, and is third on the team in scoring, averaging 14.3 points per game.

MBB | Kansas stomps Colorado 78-57

Kansas' plan was to keep Wayne Simien in the game and take David Harrison out of it. It worked on both counts.

Jayhawk coach Bill Self figured if he let the two 250-pounders bang around under the basket, both would pick up fouls. So he put a succession of his other big men on Harrison, and Colorado's 7-foot junior center fouled out before the midpoint of the second half with just five points and two rebounds.

Simien stayed out of foul trouble and had 20 points and 15 rebounds to lead No. 12 Kansas to a 78-57 victory Sunday, the Jayhawks' 21st straight over the Buffaloes in Allen Fieldhouse.

Australian Open | Raymond advances to quarterfinals

Lisa Raymond followed her upset over Venus Williams with an easy victory, defeating wild-card entry Tatiana Golovin 6-2, 6-0 Monday to reach the Australian Open quarterfinals.

She reached the quarters at Wimbledon in 2000.

She made the most of her French opponent's 22 errors, including a double-fault on break point in the first game of the second set.

Raymond produced the upset of the first week when she beat third-seeded Williams in straight sets in the third round.

MLB | Rodriguez named captain of Rangers

Alex Rodriguez was appointed captain of the Texas Rangers on Sunday following a tense offseason in which the team nearly dealt the American League MVP to the Boston Red Sox.

Rodriguez

Rodriguez met for five hours with Rangers owner Tom Hicks, general manager John Hart and manager Buck Showalter as the team's key figures tried to put the turbulent offseason behind them.

"I definitely think I'm going to be here for a long time," Rodriguez said. "I'm probably pretty sure it will work out for the best."

Showalter said he had been thinking of making Rodriguez captain for the past year. He said the only other captain under him was Don Mattingly with the New York Yankees.

"I feel a grand responsibility not only to the Texas Rangers but to our fans," Rodriguez said.

Texas agreed last month to a deal that would have sent Rodriguez to Boston for Manny Ramirez, but the trade was contingent on A-Rod agreeing to restructure his record $280 million, 10-year contract. The players' association vetoed the proposal made by Boston, saying it would have reduced the deal's value, and the trade collapsed.

Team leaders shine in K-State Invitational

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend proved successful for the women's tennis team, which was led by a homegrown leader.

The Kansas State University Invitational at the Ahearn Field House, began the first matches of the season and included Creighton and Missouri.

Maria Rosenberg, a graduate of Manhattan High School, defeated Missouri's Urska Juric to claim the singles championship. Rosenberg is in her third season with the Wildcats.

Coach Steve Bietau said he thought this weekend proved the Tigers had a stronger team than last year, but that seemed irrelevant to Rosenberg as she defeated Hana Kraftova, 6-3, 6-3 in the semifinal round Saturday, in preparation to beat Juric on Sunday, 7-6,7-6.

K-State saw an outstanding contribution from Rosenberg in the doubles competition as well.

Paired with senior Paulina Castillejos, the two defeated Creighton's Deidre Senders and Christy Roth, 8-1, in the semifinals.

Castillejos said she finds it successful to be partners with Rosenberg.

"It is nice to play with her because she is very competitive. We make a good team because we fight for each ball and keep our heads up no matter what, which helps us in matches that we are losing to come back," Castillejos said.

Bietau said both teams were great matches to get in at the beginning of the season.

"There were a number of players who did well at different times, and our idea going into this was to gain experience," he said.

Players said they are looking forward to more fierce competition this coming weekend.

"The K-State Invite was good practice, and it will help us to get ready for the upcoming Mississippi match, Castillejos said.

The Wildcats will take on Mississippi at 4 p.m. Friday and Wichita State at 3 p.m.

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the sixth consecutive year, the K-State track and field team won the coveted "milk jug" by defeating the Kansas Jayhawks and Missouri Tigers at Friday's triangular meet in Columbia, Mo.

"It was close to the highest point total we have ever scored at that meet," Coach Cliff Rovelto said of the 273.5 points amassed by the Wildcats, 46 more than second-place KU.

"It (the margin of victory) was pretty significant for the way the meet was scored (as a combination of the men's and women's teams)," he said.

On the women's side, Morgan High set a personal best and automatically qualified for the NCAA championships with a winning leap of 6 feet, .75 inches in the high jump. Janelle Wright also had a big day, placing first in both the 60 meter hurdles and the 400 meter dash.

Chaytan Hill and Amanda Riffel each made provisional qualifying marks, with Hill winning the triple jump at 42 feet, .75 inches and Riffel taking first in the weight throw with a toss of 60 feet, 9.25 inches.

Marta Borkowska also qualified with a jump of 5 feet, 11.5 inches, good for second behind High in the high jump.

Shauna Burrell, Lysaira Roman-Del Valle and Breanna Eveland also had first-place finishes in the 1,000 meter run, 800 meter dash and pole vault, respectively.

Christian Smith and Coby Cost paced the men with Smith winning the mile in a personal best time of 4 minutes, 11.8 seconds and taking second in the 800 meter and Cost placing first in the weight throw and second in the shot put.

Other winners for the men were Erik Sproll (1,000 meter), Kyle Lancaster (high jump) and Stelios Kapsalis (triple jump).

Cost and Lancaster each qualified provisionally – Cost with a distance of 64 feet, 5 inches in the weight throw, and Lancaster with a height of 7 feet, 1.75 inches in the high jump.

"A lot of our younger athletes really did a nice job, they gave all they could have and competed," Rovelto said.

"It's good for this senior class because they never had to experience losing to (Kansas and Missouri)."

The Wildcats will ride the momentum of the win into Cedar Falls, Iowa, where they compete again Saturday at the Northern Iowa Invitational.

Bobby Knight's temper shows passion

He is known simply as "The General."

The title fits him perfectly.

MATT GIRARD

He is challenging, demanding, unrelenting and intimidating, but he is also honest, fatherly and generous.

Since being hired to run the Red Raiders basketball program, he has done nothing but produce results.

In his years at Tech, Knight turned a 9-19 team the year before his arrival into a Big 12 powerhouse.

He has won 20 or more games every year at Tech and sits atop the Big 12 standings with 4-0 conference record and a 16-2 record overall.

He is best known for his temper, and rightly so. He's recognized for throwing chairs across the floor, cursing at the news media and berating players or anyone else that gets in his way.

This is what makes Knight so great. He has a passion for what he does.

All too often, fans and the news media baby players. Not Knight. He lets his team know what is expected of them, and if they fail to meet his expectations, he brings wrath.

For instance, last season Andre Emmett overslept and was late to a team breakfast. Yes, most coaches would make their star player run a few laps for punishment, but Knight made Emmett run 1,500 full-court sprints over two days.

After the punishment, Emmett bought into the Knight system, mainly to prove that a 63-year-old was not going to get to him.

Emmett is now more disciplined, working harder without the ball, crashing the boards, is the Big 12's leading scorer and is one the country's best all-around players.

Like Emmett, those who have played for Knight grow to love and revere the fiery coach and would do anything for him.

Coach Knight is a lost breed. A man that is not afraid to let people know how he feels and teaches his players the fundamentals of the game.

So, while Knight is still coaching, take the time to watch and listen because there will never be another like him.

Marching for life

Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN

Renee Wullschleger, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, Andy Georges, senior in computer science, and Kristen Mueller, freshman in general agriculture, participate in the 31st-annual March for Life rally Thursday in Washington, D.C. About100, 000 pro-life advocates marched in protest of Roe v. Wade, the landmark Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion on demand. Before marching to the Supreme Court, protesters listened to speeches made by senators and religious leaders and received a phone call from President Bush from New Mexico. The crowd consisted primarily of high school and college students from around the country. Wullschleger said of her experience, "There's no worthier cause than standing up for the lives of future generations of our country."

Truman scholarship finalists selected, will interview in March

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students were nominated by the university as finalists for the national Truman Scholarship, scholarship officials said Thursday.

From about 600 students nationwide, only 200 finalists will be selected for regional interviews, said James Hohenbary, adviser. K-State's four finalists will interview in early March.

SETH BRIDGE, SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE, HISTORY AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

"I was forced to figure out what I want to do with my life the next five and 10 years down the road," he said.

Bridge

He proposed the United States should allocate money to the Central Asian Cooperation Organization to help repair the network of pipelines that runs from the mountains to the countries in Central Asia.

"Currently, it is deteriorating, and 80 percent of the water it carries goes right into the sand," he said. "The money used to repair the pipeline would help increase the economic viability of the agriculture in these countries."

BEN FENWICK, JUNIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

"There are people getting paid a wage in the U.S. that they can't survive on," he said. "They can't provide food, clothing and housing for their children."

Workers' rights and living wage issues are the topics of Fenwick's proposal.

MELINDA SNYDER, SENIOR IN APPAREL MARKETING AND DESIGN

Visiting a fair trade organization in Mumbai, India, convinced Melinda Snyder to pursue a career in fair trade.

"I still wasn't completely convinced about the career's potential, but after visiting India I was convinced that I was dedicated to it," she said.

Snyder said she is different from other Truman Scholarship applicants.

Snyder

"They don't get many fashion design people in this field," she said. "I've never heard of someone specifically doing fair trade in this major."

BROOKLYN LIPPELMANN, SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

Lippelmann's proposal included why the Agency for International Development should condition development assistance to Ethiopia on the inclusion of women in agricultural extensions.

The K-State Police still are searching for the man who is reported to have exposed his penis to two women on campus, forcing one to watch him masturbate.

Lt. Troy Lane said there have been no new developments, although K-State Police have shared the information with agencies throughout the state to see if they could find matching behavior.

Lane said the man's behavior is considered serious and should not be dismissed as a prank.

"When it goes to this extreme, or any extreme at all, it's very serious," he said. "These types of behaviors progress over time into worse behaviors, and we'd really like to find this guy."

Lane said he's received tips but none that have panned out.

"We've checked up on tips as well as we can," he said. "We continue to pass the info around as late as this week."

Lane said information on the case including a composite picture and a description of the shirt the man was wearing can also be found on the Web site.

Lane said anyone on campus late at night should practice common sense rules. He also suggested using the escort service.

"If something doesn't feel right, call us and we will come make sure you get home safely," he said.

Kerry leading Dean in New Hampshire polls

By Ron Fournier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD, N.H. – His candidacy seemingly lifeless 10 days ago, John Kerry suddenly is reaching for a resounding victory in next week's New Hampshire primary while retooling his organization for the delegate-rich contests to follow.

Kerry

If he pulls it off, the man who won Iowa's caucuses last Monday will storm out of New Hampshire undefeated in the young campaign season, the undisputed front-runner and the man to beat when seven states vote on Feb. 3.

The first batch of weekend New Hampshire polls on Saturday showed Kerry with a comfortable lead over Howard Dean and his other rivals.

Additionally, aides said Kerry had raised $1 million in campaign cash over the Internet since his caucus victory.

But New Hampshire has a long, proud tradition of campaign upsets.

While Cahill and other advisers make plans for February and beyond, Kerry is trying to convince New Hampshire voters that his experience both in the Senate and the Vietnam War make him the best candidate to beat President Bush in November.

He hopes to keep siphoning voters from Dean, whose temperament and judgment came into question during the Iowa caucus campaign.

Residence halls' rates rise to fund suite renovations

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tuition is not the only thing that will cost students more for the 2004-2005 academic year.

Bob Burgess, assistant director for administrative services for the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said residence hall fees will rise about 7 percent next year.

"Most of the increases come from projects to renovate the halls," Burgess said.

Such projects include renovating wings of various residence halls and changing a number of the rooms into suites.

Other factors used to evaluate how much fees should be increased, he said, are inflation and any kind of projected costs for the upcoming fiscal year.

Every year, Burgess said, Housing and Dining Services officials sit down with the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls members and discuss different ideas for improvement and how those ideas should be funded.

For the academic year 2003-04, residence fees including a 20-meal plan were about $4,800.

In 2004-05, that same plan will cost $5,136, Burgess said.

In-depth
Residence halls

The Collegian takes a look at the increase in residence halls' cost for the 2004-05 academic year. Find out Tuesday how K-State's residence halls compare to other Kansas colleges.

One thing Burgess said contributed a great deal to the increase was the ongoing effort to convert several areas – such as Ford Hall – into suite configurations rather than the standard two-person setup.

"We have had one-half of the building offline for the past year in order to convert some traditional dorms into suites," Burgess said of Ford.

He said the reason behind the change to suites at Ford and other places around campus is as simple as student desire.

As a result of student feedback, Burgess said, the residence halls have gone from having about 250 suites in the system to 700.

However, he said, the change will decrease the total number of beds.

Ford Hall will go from about 620 spaces to 420 after the completion of the current renovation, Burgess said.

Burgess said it was a give-and-take relationship between KSUARH and Housing and Dining Services throughout the rate-setting process, but that KSUARH still played a major role.

"The most important thing that has always worked here is that the executive board of the ARH is very active in the setting of the rates," he said. "That's something that, as we go forward, we project what we feel is necessary to cover costs and then we open up a dialog with ARH."

Michael Pule, KSUARH president, said the group receives a wide range of suggestions from the association's general body members.

"One thing we have talked about is carpeting wings in residence halls that are not yet carpeted," Pule said.

He said any money left from planned changes would be used to expedite projects like upgrading fire systems, elevators and other changes.

"We just want to do things that would improve the quality of the residence halls," Pule said. "You get what you pay for."

Opportunity rover transmits Mars pictures, NASA scientists celebrate

By Andrew Bridges

Damian Dovarganes | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe, far left, toasts with Mars Exploration Rover members after "Opportunity's" successful landing in Mars on Saturday, during a news conference at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif. From left: O'Keefe, Ed Weiler, NASA associate administrator for space sciences, Charles Elachi, JPL director, Pete Theisinger, MER project manager and Richard Cook, MER deputy project manager.

PASADENA, Calif. – NASA's Opportunity rover zipped its first pictures of Mars to Earth on Sunday, delighting and puzzling scientists just hours after the spacecraft bounced to a landing.

The pictures show a surface smooth and dark red in some places and strewn with fragmented slabs of light bedrock in others. Bounce marks left by the rover's air bags when it landed were clearly visible.

"I am flabbergasted. I am astonished. I am blown away. Opportunity has touched down in an alien and bizarre landscape," said Steven Squyres, of Cornell University and the mission's main scientist. "I still don't know what we're looking at."

NASA began receiving the first of dozens of black-and-white and color images from Opportunity about four hours after its flawless landing.

Mission members hooted and hollered as the images splashed on a screen in mission control at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena.

Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger was there with his wife, Maria Shriver, to watch the drama unfold and walked through mission control shaking hands with the scientists.

Opportunity plunged into the martian atmosphere at more than 12,000 mph and bounced down on Mars just six minutes later, swaddled in protective air bags.

It hit with a force estimated to be just two to three times that of Earth's gravity. Engineers had designed it to withstand as much as 40 G's, said Chris Jones, director of flight projects at JPL.

The six-wheeled rover landed at 12:05 a.m. EST in Meridiani Planum, believed to be the smoothest, flattest spot on Mars. Opportunity lies 6,600 miles and halfway around the planet from where its twin, Spirit, landed Jan. 3.

On Sunday, NASA said Opportunity was in excellent health and Spirit was on the mend after a serious software problems had hobbled it.

Initial analysis of the images suggested Opportunity landed in a shallow crater roughly 66 feet across. Its low rim shouldn't block the rolling robot once it gets going, Squyres said.

Opportunity could roll off its lander in 10 to 14 days, mission manager Arthur Amador said.

Opportunity's possible targets include a larger crater, maybe 500 feet across, that lies an estimated half-mile from where the spacecraft landed.

The rover's ramp off its lander appeared unobstructed, unlike that of the Spirit rover, said Matt Wallace, another of the mission managers.

Spirit had to use an alternate ramp because a deflated air bag blocked its safest route to the martian surface.

Together, the twin 384-pound rovers make up a $820 million mission to seek out geologic evidence that Mars was once capable of sustaining life.

K-State students offered $10 of free printing in university computer labs

By Angela Rickard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the spring semester, every student is eligible for $10 free printing in the Infocommon and university computing labs, Royce Gilbert, manager of LAN Technologies, said.

All that is required to access the free printing is an eID password, and after the $10 has depleted, students can use their Wildcat card to pay for printing.

The $10 value is equivalent to 100 black and white pages or 13 color pages of high quality laser printing.

Did you know?
Free printing

Every K-State student is eligible for $10 worth of free printing in the Infocommon and university computing labs for the spring semester.

The decision to offer $10 worth of free printing was reached after research and tests were conducted in the fall.

"After conducting a cost analysis and looking at the current cost of paper and maintenance for the dot matrix printers, we decided it would be in everyone's best interest to offer limited free printing," said Tammy Dille White, directory services senior analyst for LAN Technologies. "Students and professors prefer laser printing and the dot matrix printers are expensive to service."

Gilbert said he agreed, indicating that limited free printing will benefit both students and the university.

"The dot matrix printers weren't efficient," he said. "Offering free limited printing will eliminate waste and reduce costs in the long run."

"Anything that is free is great for college students," said Reena Suryavanshi, graduate student in apparel and textiles. "Now I won't have to worry about running to the ATM or borrowing money from a friend to print pages."

Jared Tremblay, junior in secondary education, said it will be more convenient to have free prints.

"It's a major pain to have to find money to put on your card to print a paper or assignment before class," he said.

'Rings' wins best drama, best director

Golden Globes awards show attracts stars

By Anthony Breznican
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. – Hobbits ruled the Golden Globes on Sunday as "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" won four trophies including best dramatic film.

"Lost in Translation," a story of two lonely Americans who find friendship in a Tokyo hotel, collected three awards, including best comedy film, best comedy actor for Bill Murray and best screenplay for Sofia Coppola, who wrote, produced and directed the film.

"Rings" master Peter Jackson was recognized as best director, and the film won two musical awards.

"I never realized that seven years on this movie would end up turning me into a Hobbit," Jackson said, referring to the shortish, big-footed magical characters in the J.R.R. Tolkien stories.

"To all of the actors, our magical cast, you just gave so much to the movies and equally importantly you made it so much fun to work on."

Among TV nominees, HBO's six-hour adaptation of playwright Tony Kushner's "Angels in America" won five trophies, including best miniseries or TV movie.

But movies gathered most of the attention as Sean Penn collected best movie drama actor for playing an emotionally ravaged father seeking revenge for his daughter's murder in "Mystic River," and Charlize Theron won the drama actress honor for "Monster," the story of a prostitute serial killer.

Theron thanked writer-director Patty Jenkins for believing she could play the role: "There's only so much you can do, but if somebody doesn't give you a chance there is nothing you can do."

New Zealand director Peter Jackson speaks on behalf of the cast and crew of "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King," after the film won best motion picture drama at the 61st Annual Golden Globe Awards on Sunday. Jackson also won for best director for the film.

Murray thanked Coppola and went on to dryly mock Hollywood award speeches, declaring he had fired all his agents and representatives and had no one else to thank.

He also poked fun at the idea that comedy performers are overshadowed by dramatic stars.

"Too often we forget our brothers on the other side of the aisle – the dramatic actors," he said. I'd just like to say: Where would our war, our miseries and our psychological traumas come from?"

Report calls Iraq weapons intelligence misleading

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. intelligence agencies need to explain why their research indicated Iraq possessed banned weapons before the American-led invasion, says the outgoing top U.S. inspector, who now believes Saddam Hussein had no such arms.

"I don't think they exist," David Kay said Sunday. "The fact that we found so far the weapons do not exist – we've got to deal with that difference and understand why."

Kay's remarks on National Public Radio reignited criticism from Democrats, who ignored his cautions that the failure to find weapons of mass destruction was "not a political issue."

"It's an issue of the capabilities of one's intelligence service to collect valid, truthful information," Kay said.

Asked whether President Bush owed the nation an explanation for the gap between his warnings and Kay's findings, Kay said: "I actually think the intelligence community owes the president, rather than the president owing the American people."

The CIA would not comment Sunday on Kay's remarks, although one intelligence official pointed out that Kay himself had predicted last year that his search would turn up banned weapons.

Kay said his predictions were not "coming back to haunt me in the sense that I am embarrassed. They are coming back to haunt me in the sense of 'Why could we all be so wrong?'"

The White House stuck by its assertions that illicit weapons will be found in Iraq but had no additional response on Sunday to Kay's remarks.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said Kay's comments reinforced his belief that the Bush administration had exaggerated the threat Iraq posed.

"It confirms what I have said for a long period of time, that we were misled – misled not only in the intelligence, but misled in the way that the president took us to war," Kerry, a White House contender, said on "Fox News Sunday." "I think there's been an enormous amount of exaggeration, stretching, deception."

Hans Blix, the former chief U.N. inspector whose work was heavily criticized by Kay and ended when the United States went to war with Iraq, said Sunday the United States should have known the intelligence was flawed last year when leads followed up by U.N. inspectors didn't produce any results.

"I was beginning to wonder what was going on," he told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

"Weren't they wondering, too? If you find yourself on a train that's going in the wrong direction, it's best to get off at the next stop."

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said he was surprised Kay "did not find some semblance of WMD" in Iraq. Roberts said a report on Iraq intelligence, to be delivered to his panel Wednesday, should help clarify the CIA's prewar performance.

"It appears now that that intelligence – there's a lot of questions about it," Roberts said on CNN's "Late Edition."

In October 2002, Bush said Iraq had "a massive stockpile of biological weapons that has never been accounted for and is capable of killing millions."

In his television address two days before launching the invasion, Bush said U.S. troops would enter Iraq "to eliminate weapons of mass destruction."

Kay returned permanently from Iraq last month, having found no biological, nuclear or chemical weapons nor missiles with longer range than Iraq's troublesome president, Saddam Hussein, was allowed under international restrictions.

But on Sunday, Kay reiterated his conclusion that Saddam had "a large number of WMD program-related activities."

And, he said, Iraq's leaders had intended to continue those activities.

Sebelius to propose state-owned casino

By Bill Draper
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Every year, Kansans make millions of visits to casinos just over the state line in Kansas City, Mo.

And every year, state officials go hunting for millions of dollars in new revenue for state government.

All of which could lead to a new enterprise: state ownership of a large, Las Vegas-style casino, most likely in Wyandotte County near Kansas Speedway.

It's an idea that Gov. Kathleen Sebelius is expected to propose in the coming days and that a leading lawmaker says is gaining support.

Other cash-strapped states also have contemplated casino ownership.

The idea has been at least introduced in recent years from Oregon to Texas, although it has been studied and rejected in Illinois, Maryland and New Hampshire.

In Kansas, only two entities – the state or an Indian tribe – are empowered by the state constitution to own a casino.

All four tribes with Kansas reservations already have casinos, and many advocates of expanded gambling think the state would reap more revenue by owning a casino than if a new tribal one were built.

Consensus is lacking so far on how much control the state would have to exercise over a casino to satisfy the Kansas Constitution.

Matt All, Sebelius' general counsel, said the governor does not anticipate that the state would build the casino or hire the staff. But it would control the gambling business and have a larger role in day-to-day management than other states play in the operations of privately owned casinos, he said.

"To some extent, it's just a matter of degree," All said.

All said recently that Sebelius' proposal – expected by the end of the week – would create a state board to pick private companies to manage large, state-owned "destination" casinos designed to attract patrons from within and outside Kansas.

The board would determine how many casinos could be built in Kansas, and where.

The state would control the gambling operations, including selection of games and payout percentages.

It has no such control over casinos owned by Indian tribes, nor does it receive any revenue from them.

The chairman of a task force Sebelius appointed last year predicted $100 million; some legislators have said $150 million or more.

They buy about $200 million worth of Kansas Lottery tickets each year, and the state constitution also permits bingo and betting on dog and horse races.

The Missouri Gaming Commission said Kansans accounted for 3.24 million of the 10.8 million visits to riverboat casinos in the Kansas City market in the past 12 months, or about 30 percent.

Food Court changes appreciated

SETH BISHOP

Pizza delivery times have increased by 10 minutes, regardless of the time of day, and parking spaces at Dillons are more and more scarce.

Although students are worrying about their pencils and books and teachers are practicing their dirty looks, not a lot of concern is being focused on food.

Luckily, there are those willing to do just that – namely, me.

The dissatisfaction with Eddie Peppers was overwhelming. The Union Food Court staff realized, listened and conceded.

Taco Bell returned to its previous location in the Food Court and was immediately inundated with hungry Wildcats, creating a record-breaking sales total on its first day of opening.

I was on hand to cut the ribbon at the grand opening, and I was honored by the invitation. Welcome back, Taco Bell. I wish you continued success.

Other changes are taking place in the Union as well.

Union Station has evolved. Soup is still available at soup stations throughout the Food Court, and one of the wells has the delicious bread bowls, so look for it.

I confess I have not eaten there, but simply looking at the menu offerings on my tour through has made me desirous to return.

The change I am eagerly awaiting is the snack stand across from the Food Court. It is still unnamed. Very sinister, Voldemort-feeling, don't you think? The-Snack-Stand-That-Has-Not-Been-Named.

The Union Powers That Be tell me there will be a contest in February to come up with a name for it. Watch for details.

More important than its name is what it is offering: K-State's very own Call Hall Ice Cream, sandwiched between Otis Spunkmeyer cookies. Yummy!

Not worth the risk

'Along Came Polly' reeks of bad humor, weak characters

"Along Came Polly"

Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

I enjoyed "Along Came Polly" a lot more when it was "There's Something About Mary."

The toilet humor and characters are nearly identical, so much so that Ben Stiller seems bored in his usual nice-but-awkward-guy role.

This year's version of "Mary" tells the story of a man who is afraid of taking risks but tries to win the heart of a woman (Jennifer Aniston) who seems to have little direction in her life and enjoys taking one too many risks for character's taste.

All this happens after Stiller's character finds his new wife (Debra Messing) messing around with a scuba instructor on their honeymoon. Although we've seen Stiller's character type countless times before in other movies (I assume talent skips a generation with Stiller), it's almost heartbreaking to see Aniston, not even finished with her decade-long sitcom, already making horrible career choices.

She seems to be going the route of the ex- "Saturday Night Live" player in signing on to movies like "Polly." Messing's character, the unfaithful wife, is easy to hate, and you'll love hating her when she comes back to Stiller, begging for the secure, safe life she so recklessly threw away during their honeymoon.

Hoffman's character is a has-been actor whose grandiose self-image from being in one film in the 1980s has alienated many people with whom he comes in contact. Hoffman's character, who remains the underrated comic focus of the film, also learns an important lesson about breaking away from the past to live in the present.

Ultimately, the message of "Along Came Polly" is a good one, that sometimes happiness can be achieved by taking risks despite our own fears, but its delivery leaves much to be desired.

The wooden characters and less-than-funny visual gags make seeing this movie a risk you'd be better off not taking.

DiFranco's album redefines singer/songwriter

"Educated Guess"

★★★☆☆

Album review by Jessica Grant

The year 2003 saw the re-emergence of the singer/songwriter. John Mayer, Damien Rice and Jack Johnson were just a few of the artists who found their niche this last year.

Though the singer/songwriter is nothing new to the music industry, these artists found a dedicated following in a generation that has lacked a face to represent the genre.

With 2004 barely cemented enough in our minds to write the appropriate date in our checkbooks, another artist released an album that redefines the DIY mentality of the singer/songwriter – Ani DiFranco.

For her 16th full-length album since 1991, DiFranco not only plays all of the instruments and provides the lead and backing vocals, but for the first time in her career she single-handedly did all of the recording and mixing for the album.

According to a recent press release from Righteous Babe Records (DiFranco's personal record label), "Educated Guess" was recorded on vintage reel-to-reel equipment in a shack in New Orleans and in Buffalo.

This use of vintage equipment calls to mind the recording process of the White Stripes' phenomenal 2003 release, "Elephant."

I safely can say that DiFranco needs no coaching from Jack White when it comes to recording on vintage equipment, a statement proven by the quality of this album.

Courtesy art

One element of a singer/songwriters' music that is alluring to fans is the strong lyrical content.

"Educated Guess" reaffirms DiFranco's amazing poetic prowess with language that is moving, playful and always direct.

DiFranco knows how to use the first-person narrative style to her benefit, allowing the listener to feel as though each song on the album is simply an intimate snippet taken from a personal conversation with DiFranco.

On songs like "Bubble" and "Swim," DiFranco poignantly strikes a chord with everyone's inner romantic through her reflections on the sometimes sharp nature of love.

One of the defining elements of DiFranco's music is her avid dedication to the human cause. Her music is often political and emphasizes her left-leaning nature.

The song "Grand Canyon" is an explanation to people who cannot begin to fathom the connection between patriotism and dissent.

DiFranco is too often thought of as simply a feminist.

Unfortunately, some people think this is a negative label, but DiFranco is one of the few truly charismatic musicians who is not too cynical to believe that art can influence people positively.

To me, this is enough to label DiFranco as the face of a genre that could use a strong female leader.

KEITH | Country singer entertains lively audience

"He sings songs that are kind of controversial that most people don't (sing)," Jennifer Hamlin, sophomore in kinesiology said.

"He tells it like it is, and people find that controversial because it's hard to speak the truth and say things the way they really are."

Other fans shrugged off Keith's label as a controversy starter, saying he is just being honest.

"I think at the time it's exactly what a lot of country fans are looking for," Smith said.

"I think he's seen as a model when it comes to patriotism, getting people fired up and rallying around our nation."

It's that kind of patriotism that fans said was the most appealing characteristic of Keith's music.

Tina Ayotte, who works at Fort Riley, said Keith's songs make the plight of our nation's soldiers more real to people.

"We work out on the post and see the soldiers every day," Ayotte said.

"(We) see them coming and going and hear about what they're doing for us.

"He sings about that and brings it home."

Some might think Keith went too far with his lyrics in "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue," but signs and shirts with the words "I love an American soldier" on them and miniature American flags waving in the stands showed that Keith's fans supported his stance.

"It was awesome," said Justin Palmer, senior from Missouri Western State College. "I'm not disappointed at all. It was definitely worth the trip."

"We get a lot of calls like this," Blanck said. "Once in a while you get some marking or some flare-up, but the fire is usually out by the time we get there."

Blanck said the department has responded to about 16 phone calls, but to his knowledge none have been of a serious nature.

He said the Manhattan Fire Department was expecting more of the same types of calls throughout the night.

"We will notify the power company and then stand by to make sure no one comes into contact with the downed line," Loecker said.

It is also important, Loecker said, for people to realize they can be adversely affected by the downed line even without coming into contact with it.

"They can create an electric field in the ground around them," Loecker said. "Power lines downed on conductive materials such as electric fences can also energize the entire fence."

Loecker said it's best to just stay away from them and contact officials. He said students walking to and from class this morning still should take caution, as there occasionally are lines down in front of buildings and in back yards.

The Riley County Police Department said they had nothing to report.

— Edie Hall contributed to this story.

What to do

If the power goes out

- Report a power outage to the power company
- Immediately report any power line hazards to appropriate officials
- Do not touch downed or hanging power lines or anything touching them.
- Monitor the status of power restoration activities on local radio stations.
- Avoid opening the refrigerator or freezer. Food will stay frozen in a fully loaded freezer for 36 to 48 hours if the doors remain closed. If the freezer is half full, the food will generally keep 24 hours.
- Keep candles away from furniture, draperies and other flammable materials. Also, keep children and pets away from open flames.
- Disconnect or turn off appliances that were on when the power outage occurred. Leave a light on so you will know when power is restored.
- Use space heaters only in well-ventilated areas.
- Use a camp stove, fireplace or can of sterno for cooking. Don't use charcoal or any other fuels in unventilated areas.
- If you leave your home while the power is out, double-check that all heat-producing appliances, such as stoves, irons and curling irons, are unplugged.
- If there is severe damage and it appears that the outage will last an extended period of time, consider moving to an alternate location.

U.S. soldiers confiscate weapons, arrest nearly 50 people in Iraq raids

By Paul Garwood
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TIKRIT, Iraq - U.S. soldiers arrested nearly 50 people and confiscated weapons in several raids in Iraq's volatile Sunni Triangle after a series of bombings that killed six U.S. soldiers.

A U.S. soldier died Sunday of wounds suffered in a grenade attack on his Bradley vehicle that was patrolling a central Iraqi town of Beiji the day before, said Maj. Josslyn Aberle, a spokeswoman for the 4th Infantry Division.

Five other U.S. soldiers were killed in separate bombings and a blast that narrowly missed an American convoy killed four Iraqis and wounded about 40 others in a bloody day of attacks on Saturday.

Most of the deaths have occurred since President Bush declared an end to active combat May 1.

The deaths raised to 513 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the United States and its allies launched the Iraq war March 20. Most of the deaths have occurred since President Bush declared an end to active combat May 1.

The violence underscores continued resistance to the American occupation that is strongest in the Sunni heartland north and west of Baghdad, despite the Dec. 13 capture of Saddam Hussein.

On Sunday, U.S. soldiers raided several locations in Baqouba, 35 miles northeast of the capital, and captured 46 people including three men suspected of involvement in anti-coalition activities, Aberle said. The remaining 43 were detained for possessing weapons without authorization, she said.

In Mukayshifa, a town south of Tikrit, soldiers raided a house Saturday and confiscated 220 hand grenades, Aberle said.

Insurgents fired the rocket propelled grenade at the Bradley in the town of Beiji, north of Tikrit, late Saturday, critically wounding the soldier, who later died.

anonymity, said there were no U.S. casualties.

The latest deaths raised to 513 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the United States and its allies launched the Iraq war March 20. Most of the deaths have occurred in the insurgency by Saddam Hussein loyalists since President Bush declared an end to active combat May 1.

The Bush administration launched the war, claiming Saddam had violated U.N. resolutions requiring Iraq to destroy its weapons of mass destruction.

Nine months after the collapse of Saddam's regime, no such weapons have been found. On Sunday, David Kay, the former top U.S. weapons inspector in Iraq, said he believes Saddam had no weapons of mass destruction before the U.S.-led invasion. Kay said the challenge for the United States now is to figure out why intelligence indicated that the Iraqi president did have them.

"We led this search to find the truth, not to find the weapons," Kay said on the National Public Radio program "Weekend Edition." "The fact that we found so far the weapons do not exist, we've got to deal with that difference and understand why."

The Bush administration is now embroiled in a political dispute with the country's powerful Shiite Muslim clergy over the blueprint for returning sovereignty to the Iraqis by July 1. Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Husseini al-Sistani wants members of a new legislature chosen by the voters, rather than selected in regional caucuses as the United States plans.

U.S. officials say the continuing violence and the absence of an electoral roll or a census make it impossible to hold early elections. However, the United States cannot afford to offend the Shiite leadership, because Shiites are estimated to comprise about 60 percent of Iraq's 25 million people.

Muwafaq al-Rubaei, a Shiite member of the U.S.-installed Governing Council, told reporters Sunday following a meeting with al-Sistani that the Ayatollah is sticking to his demand for elections and believes they can be held before July 1.

"The clerics' opinion is the opinion of the Iraqi people in general," al-Rubaei said. "The constitution shall be written by Iraqis elected by Iraqis and not by foreigners. Al-Sistani's call is still in place to hold elections."

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan is expected to announce this week whether to send a team to Iraq to assess if early polls are possible. Washington hopes that the involvement of the United Nations will help break the deadlock and satisfy the Shiites.

Weapons report questions justification for war

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. – The White House retreated Monday from its once-confident claims that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction, and Democrats swiftly sought to turn the about-face into an election-year issue against President Bush.

The administration's switch came after retired chief U.S. weapons inspector David Kay said he had concluded, after nine months of searching, that Saddam Hussein did not have stockpiles of forbidden weapons.

...retired chief U.S. weapons inspector David Kay said he had concluded, after nine months of searching, that Saddam Hussein did not have stockpiles of forbidden weapons.

Asked about Kay's remarks, White House spokesman Scott McClellan refused to repeat oft-stated assertions that prohibited weapons eventually would be found.

McClellan said the inspectors should continue their work "so that they can draw as complete a picture as possible. And then we can learn – it will help us learn the truth."

Kay, meanwhile, was called to appear at a public hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee on Wednesday and agreed to attend, a Senate aide said.

Sen. John Kerry, seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, said Bush had misled the nation.

"When the president of the United States looks at you and tells you something, there should be some trust," Kerry said from the campaign trail in Keene, N.H. "He's broken every one of those promises."

Howard Dean, another Democratic candidate, said, "The White House has not been candid with the American people about virtually anything with the Iraq war."

The U.S. war against terrorism is Bush's strongest suit against Democrats, and his handling of Iraq has the approval of more than half of Americans questioned in polls. Analysts said it was doubtful the weapons issue would hurt Bush much.

"It depends on how the Democrats play it," said James Thurber, director of the Center for Congressional and Presidential Studies at American University.

Diet poses long-term health risks

By Lara Hastings
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It seems like a magical weight loss plan.

Faithful followers enjoy red meat, eggs and other foods high in saturated fat and cholesterol and watch themselves dwindle down to a smaller size in a short amount of time.

The high-protein, low-carbohydrate diets might produce a slimmer physique, but the short and long term affects of such diets could be hard to ignore.

Success stories have been circulating about such high-protein diets as the Atkins diet, and students might decide to take the low carbohydrate route.

But the question remains: Is cutting carbohydrates healthy?

The Atkins diet, developed by Robert Atkins in the 1970s, cuts carbohydrates and as a result, the body uses fat reserves for energy. The body begins to burn fat, but when the body goes without carbohydrates for an extended period of time, a metabolic state called ketosis begins.

Dianna Schalles, health educator at Lafene Health Center and registered dietician, said ketosis is an adaptive response to inadequate calories.

Although the side effects of ketosis are unpleasant, the main concern surrounding the Atkins diet is the amount of protein consumed containing high amounts of saturated fat.

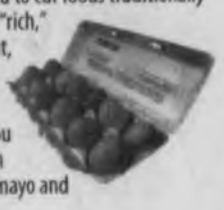
The high fat content causes an increase in cholesterol and lipids, which might lead to artery blockage and heart disease.

"Some people are more prone to heart disease and the high fat intake may increase their chances of developing heart-related problems later in life," said Tina Remig, registered dietician and assistant professor in the Department of Human Nutrition.

Schalles said the low amount of carbohydrates in the diets might pose a cancer risk. The diets do not allow an adequate amount of fruits and vegetables that have been shown to reduce cancer.

The high-protein, low-carbohydrate diets might produce a slimmer physique, but the short and long term affects of such diets could be hard to ignore. Both Schalles and Remig said a varied and balanced diet along with exercise is still the best ways to maintain a healthy lifestyle.

Carb counters



Photos by Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN

Ryan Epstein, senior in management information systems and marketing, adds shredded cheese to an Atkins meal while Kris Smith, junior in industrial engineering, stands in the kitchen at Kite's Bar and Grill in Aggieville. Kite's has a full menu catered to those on the Atkins diet.

At a glance
The Atkins diet

- Allows you to eat foods traditionally regarded as "rich," such as meat, eggs and cheese.

- Allows you to cook with butter, use mayo and olive oil.
- Sets few limits on the amount of food you eat but instead severely restricts the kinds of foods on your plate: no refined sugar, milk, white rice or white flour.

- Carbs are severely restricted (less than 20 grams per day) in the first two weeks.
- Later, the carb allowance is increased in the form of fiber-rich foods.

- Over time, the transition from weight loss to weight maintenance is made by gradually increasing carbs.

Restaurants, Union Food Court develop low-carb menus for Atkins dieters

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He's not a carbohydrate counter, but two or three times a week, Doug Chapman orders an entree from the Kite's Bar and Grill Atkins menu.

The menu, introduced to the bar's customers about four months ago, reaches out to those people watching their carbohydrate intake – or in Chapman's case, those who just want to eat healthy.

"It's a proven fact that watching your carbohydrates is a good idea," Chapman, Manhattan resident, said. "I don't watch my carbohydrates, but I regularly order off the menu. It can't hurt you."

Curt Theobald, floor manager for Kite's, said the Atkins menu idea came after customers made special requests for their orders.

"We noticed a trend that people were coming in and ordering a burger with no bun and no fries," Theobald said.

As a result, Kite's chef researched the popular Atkins diet and developed a menu that includes 13 entree items, such as smothered steak and low carbohydrate vegetables, in addition to side dishes and desserts. The menu, Theobald said, has been a success.

Burger King advertises low-carbohydrate platters and T.G.I.Friday's has created an Atkins-approved menu.

Jennifer Green, manager of the Village Plaza Subway in Manhattan, said the restaurant sells between 60 and 75 wraps a day.

The wraps's popularity, Green said, is due to the variety it offers its consumers.

"I think it's brought something different to the store," she said. "We have some people who aren't on the Atkins diet who come in and want to try them out because they're new."

The Union Food Court also is catching on to the low-carbohydrate plan.

Gayle Thober, senior director of dining service, said the K-State Student Union is looking at ways to make sure its consumers are aware of the low-carb options the Food Court has available.

"A lot of students asked which items are low carb on the menu," Thober said. "We wanted to stay ahead of it and get options to the students."

Thober said students watching their carbohydrates have options at Market Carvery, Mean Gene's Burgers, and numerous choices at the salad bar. Sandwich Central is even looking at ways to make its menu more low-carb friendly, she said.

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

Reader responses needed for Collegian's improvement

AMY LINK
Amy can be reached at aml7555@k-state.edu

Hi my name is Amy, and I'll be your waitress.

OK, I lied. I'm not actually the carrier of food or drinks, but my job is a lot like it.

Just as a waitress serves as your messenger to the chef or bartender, I am your connection to the newsroom.

It is my job to answer your complaints about what stories the Collegian chooses to cover, whether the reporting was fair, whether the paper represents K-State with good taste, and to answer any other concerns.

Reporters are often seen as power-hungry individuals, who hide behind their computers to distribute criticism. The portrait not seen is that of the reporter desperately writing a story that readers will want, yet not having a clue how to do it.

A question often heard in the newsroom is what exactly do the readers want. To be honest, a lot of times we don't know.

Tell us what you want – we do care. As journalists we have learned that we can't please every reader all the time.

However, what we can promise is that in every paper we will do our best to inform and entertain you in a fair and accurate manner. This is our responsibility – make us accountable.

Obviously, the Collegian can't be perfect, but with your help we can improve.

So give me your order, and I'll do my best to answer it.

Simple lifestyle changes can boost immune system

By Melissa Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Changing your lifestyle can prevent illness.

"It's easier said than done, but possible," said Dianna Schalles, registered dietitian and health educator for Lafene Health Center.

"There are five main lifestyle changes that, if followed, boost the immune system, hindering the possibility of an ailment to occur."

The first step in preventing illness is washing your hands regularly. It seems petty, but is often overlooked and forgotten. With all the germs floating around, it proves to be smart and very important.

Next is getting an adequate amount of sleep.

Although this often is hard for college students, sleep is an important part of keeping healthy and feeling up to par and ready to fight infection.

Keeping whole grains, vegetables, fruits and nuts in your diet is a great way to ensure your body gets the proper nutrients needed.

An adequate amount of exercise also is something that boosts the immune system.

"A healthy diet needs to be full of a variety of foods for nutrients. Vitamins B6, C, zinc and folic acid are necessary for fulfilling healthy eating habits," said Schalles.

Meals that lack nutrients, including refined or processed foods, might be a contributing factor in catching a cold.

A poor diet does not offer enough variety, and therefore lacks nutrients needed for aiding the immune system to fight back.

Schalles said despite what most believe, too much Vitamin C can make the immune system break down.

"Studies show that large doses of vitamin C don't cure the common cold or boost the immune system. In some cases, the larger dose may cause side effects," Schalles said.

"Our bodies need phyto-nutrients to enhance the immune system and repair damaged cells.

In battling infection, a safe route includes staying well-hydrated and having a diet of foods high in nutrients.

"Doing so keeps the lining of the mouth and nose moist, which in turn, makes you less susceptible to colds," Sanborn said.

Another lifestyle change that poses a problem for college students is avoiding stress. A low stress level will benefit a complete healthy lifestyle.

"College students need to remember that all five lifestyles work together to ensure good health and reduce stress," Schalles said.

Patriot Act section declared unconstitutional

By Linda Deutsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES – For the first time, a federal judge has declared unconstitutional a section of the USA Patriot Act that bars giving expert advice or assistance to groups designated foreign terrorist organizations.

In a ruling handed down late Friday and made available Monday, U.S. District Judge Audrey Collins said the ban is impermissibly vague in its wording.

The U.S. Justice Department is reviewing the ruling, spokesman Mark Corallo said in a statement from Washington.

Corallo called the Patriot Act – the federal anti-terrorism statute passed in the aftermath of Sept. 11 – "an essential tool in the war on terror" and asserted that the portion at issue in the ruling was only a modest amendment to a pre-existing anti-terrorism law.

David Cole, a Georgetown University law professor who argued the case on behalf of the Humanitarian Law Project, declared the ruling "a victory for everyone who believes the war on terrorism ought to be fought consistent with constitutional principles."

"It is the first federal court decision declaring any part of the Patriot Act unconstitutional," he said.

The case before the court involved five groups and two U.S. citizens seeking to provide support for lawful, nonviolent activities on behalf of Kurdish refugees in Turkey.

The Humanitarian Law Project said the plaintiffs were threatened with 15 years in prison if they advised groups on seeking a peaceful resolution of the Kurds' campaign for self-determination in Turkey.

The judge's ruling said the law, as written, does not differentiate between impermissible advice on violence and encouraging the use of peaceful, nonviolent means to achieve goals.

TO THE POINT

Atkins diet leaves people without vital nutrients

Atkins is everywhere, but is this diet really for everyone?

Despite the booming popularity of the low carbohydrate, high protein weight loss solution, there are important things to consider before jumping on the Atkins bandwagon.

Before beginning any diet, visit a doctor or nutritionist to discuss the potential risks.

Choose the diet that is right for your lifestyle instead of allowing a fad to dictate your choice. High-carbohydrate foods, such as fruits and some vegetables, also contain vital nutrients. The Atkins diet can leave you nutritionally unbalanced.

The focus should be on balance. By eating a well-balanced diet, with both carbohydrates and protein in moderation, a more healthy approach to weight loss is possible.

Judging from Bush's State of the Union speech, he apparently thinks that gay marriage is a bigger threat to the U.S. than Osama bin Laden is.

Dear Kathryn Hollingsworth, do you realize that it undermines your whole point if you use an example you pull out of thin air? If you're going to dictate your morals on others, at least have the decency to take the time to research a real example.

I hope the critical reader picks up the opinion page and realizes that Kathryn Hollingsworth needs a new trick to write her opinions.

Nasrina, you go girl. I agree with you all the way.

Is Tom Daschle the Senate minority leader or minority leader because the Collegian has printed both, and I do believe there's a difference.

I like K-State's snow removal policy: just push it into the street and let the city take care of it.

Why does Kathryn Hollingsworth get a half page to support abortion, but students who traveled to D.C. for a pro-life demonstration just get a caption?

Abortion should be illegal, maybe then people would learn to take responsibility for their actions.

Double standard

Universities should challenge students to defend ideas, not limit differences

BARBARA MEYER

At the University of Colorado, discrimination of biblical proportions is occurring against conservative students, and they're not about to sit back and take it.

In what progressives are calling a "witch hunt" and "a bunch of anecdotal nonsense," students like Danielle Robinson are speaking up about being forced to actually learn about liberal views by professors whose radical beliefs include "innocent people should not die for an unjust war."

One man, who filed his complaint anonymously while citing his professors by name, was shattered when he actually had to defend the political views he expressed in class.

In an attempt to stem the tide of evil, the University of Colorado branch of the College Republicans, proudly wearing their "Join us now ... Or work for us later!" T-shirts, launched an effort to keep liberal professors off their soapboxes in class. Chairman, Brad Jones said they have collected numerous "concrete examples of bias" for their "arsenal."

In support of the students' cause, the Colorado Legislature passed Joint Resolution 04-1003, which condemns, among other things, policies restricting anti-homosexual speech, mandatory diversity training and open membership of student organizations at public universities.

The state of Colorado apparently believes it's a violation of student rights to educate them about cultural differences within our society or subject them to the fear that Muslims, vegetarians or, God forbid, liberals might join the university golf club at any moment.

They want their hate speech and they're willing to fight every liberal in Boulder for it.

Interestingly enough, it was only two weeks ago that members of this same organization at Drake University in Iowa disrupted a liberal get-out-the-vote rally by physically assaulting guest speaker Joan Jett.

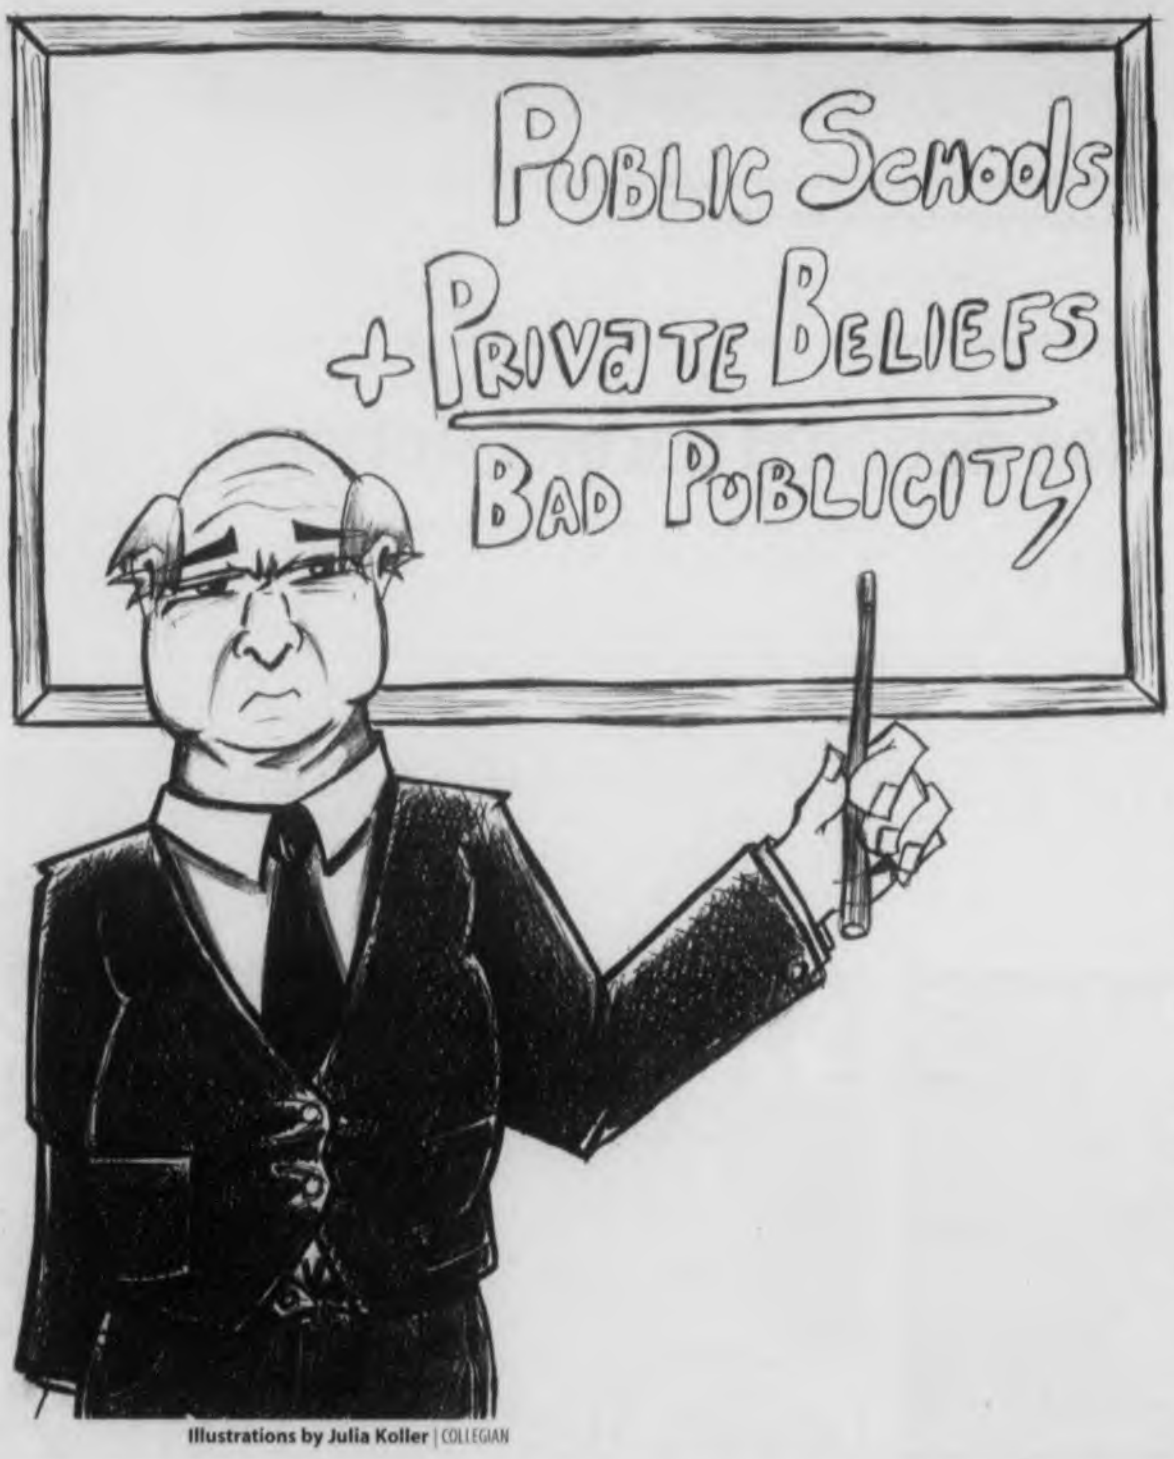
Order was restored by campus police and no serious injuries were reported, but the situation illustrates a point.

While the students claim their First Amendment rights have been violated, what they actually want is to limit the same rights of those with whom they disagree with.

They want freedom from the opinions of liberal professors, while maintaining their own right to express their conservative ideology – otherwise known as the doctrine for being closeminded and hypocritical.

Last time I checked, students attend class to hear what their better educated professors have to say. Professors don't attend class to be lectured on the personal prejudices and opinions of their students.

However, I don't think the discrimination these students feel results from being silenced about their ideas, but rather that they have been required to defend those ideas in class and many of them can't.



As Tamara Louden put it "While I may know broadly what I believe, I have not been given the tools to make the strong arguments on subtle points." She concedes that conservative views were explored in her class; she is mostly unhappy that her professor made her look silly.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law. . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." That includes students, but it also includes faculty. What it doesn't include is freedom from the speech of others.

Unfortunately for these students, the legislature has taken their part in protecting them from diversity, liberals and anything else that might make them feel "uncomfortable."

If students can get their degrees without being challenged to rethink and defend their political, moral and social ideas, whether liberal or conservative, their university has failed them. Part of growing up and becoming an educated person is to know what you believe and why so that when the time comes to defend yourself, you can.

Columnist's peace of mind lost with semester chaos

JONATHAN LAMB

So, you're back. Good to see you. I must say, you're looking rather well rested – most of you anyway.

Except for you Intercession folk. Goodness knows you look like you're about to snap, draw dots on your face with a permanent blue Sharpie and run around asking strangers to look at your pretty freckles. Weirdoes.

During the first week of classes, I often find that the state of our city very closely matches the state of my own mind.

How positively serene are the months of January, June, and July, when the bulk of you 20,000 beautiful people pack up your undies and curling irons and go out for jobs, the occasional road trip and time with family.

The aisles at Dillons, usually crowded with housemates frantically trying to compromise on what kind of reheatable dinner to purchase (I fancy the chicken teriyaki), are spacious beyond the hungry shopper's most outrageous fantasies.

Go ahead, veer that cart back and forth as you walk, reciting the mantra, "I'm in London, I'm in America; I like canned corn, I like peas."

And best of all, the hellish furor that is North Manhattan Avenue slows to a medium-paced furor.

Without the students, all is bliss. All is governable and calm.

And in my apartment, which is roughly the size of a grapefruit, I sit, drinking Earl Grey tea, soaking in the calm like some kind of elysian sponge. I can read long, complicated, yet beautiful Russian novels in days rather than weeks.

In the local coffee house I enjoy conversation characterized more by casual ease than by the typical nervous excitement. And promptly after every meal, I wash, dry and put away the dishes without having to self-deliver a motivational speech.

But at my back I always hear the rumble of the coming semester. Deep down in places I don't like to talk about, below the piano lessons and the Henry James novels and "The English Patient," there is the looming awareness that soon all will change, both in my state of mind and in the blessed city of Manhattan.

It begins, like so many deluges, with a trickle. A handful of young men in wool coats and chinos, or cargo shorts and flip-flops, depending on the season, are spotted walking into the bar.

A teal Camry darts up Manhattan Avenue containing four heads of blonde hair with brighter blonde highlights. And very shortly, the handfuls become countless thousands, a wonderful, youthful horde.

By the first day of classes, driving to Wal-Mart is a nightmarish expedition that makes Jacques Cousteau look like a Muppet Baby (well, a French one), while crossing North Manhattan Avenue qualifies as a death wish in 23 states.

Likewise with my state of mind.

I pile around myself the books, papers, dishes, sweatshirts, socks and sentimentalities that were once in their proper places. I lose the desire to shave.

Having now begun my 10th and final semester as a K-State student, I feel moderately equipped to share with you some hints on beginning the semester and developing your own, supposedly healthy, routine.

If you have resolved, to exercise regularly at the Rec, do not betray the real force of the word resolution by going for only one day and never returning.

How mentally strong, I ask, is the person who cannot outlast the minor discomforts of moving?

Whenever possible, make use of what I and my posse once dubbed the Bertrand/Juliette Superhighway. Saves fuel. Fewer stops. Can life get better?

Give a chance to that professor about whom you might have heard bad things. Often the most formative and rewarding classroom experiences emerge from difficult situations. Challenges are supposed to be healthy. That what makes them challenges.

Teen serves 3 years of life sentence

By Jill Barton
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. – Lionel Tate, the teen who killed a 6-year-old playmate and became the youngest defendant in the nation to be locked away for life, was released Monday after three years behind bars.

Wearing a light blue golf shirt, Tate emerged unshackled from the jail surrounded by his mother, attorneys and other supporters. Tate and his mother held hands and raised them in the air.

"For now, Lionel wants to go home, he wants to feel his pillow, he wants to sleep in his own bed and his mom to make him his favorite meal tonight," said his attorney Richard Rosenbaum.

Circuit Judge Joel Lazarus earlier ordered Tate freed without bail, a month after an appeals court threw out the boy's conviction because his mental competency was not evaluated before trial.

Tate, 16, has since struck a plea bargain that will mean no further time in prison.

Supporters have rallied from the Vatican to the United Nations to free Tate since he was convicted of first-degree murder in the death of 6-year-old playmate Tiffany Eunick three years ago.

Tate was 12 when he punched, kicked and stomped the 48-pound girl to death in 1999.

Lou Toman | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Lionel Tate smiles as his attorney Richard Rosenbaum looks over court papers at a bond hearing Monday in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Tate, the teen who killed a 6-year-old playmate and became the youngest defendant in the nation to be locked away for life, was ordered released after three years behind bars. Circuit Judge Joel Lazarus ordered Tate freed without bail, a month after an appeals court threw out the boy's conviction because his mental competency was not evaluated before trial.

Tate had claimed he accidentally killed the girl while imitating professional wrestling moves he had seen on television.

The case stirred debate over a Florida law that requires children convicted of first-degree murder to get life in prison without parole.

After Tate's conviction was thrown out, prosecutors renewed their offer of a three-year sentence in exchange for a guilty plea to second-degree murder – the same offer Tate's mother had turned down before the trial.

After meeting with a psychologist who will test his mental competence, Tate is to appear at another hearing Thursday, when he is expected to plead guilty to the second-degree murder charge and be formally sentenced.

He has agreed to one year of house arrest, 10 years' probation, counseling and 1,000 hours of community service.

"I just want to give God thanks first and foremost," said Tate's mother, Kathleen Grossett-Tate.

"Continue to pray for us because we're going to need it. This is a new chapter in our lives and we're just going to go forward."

Tiffany's mother, Deweese Eunick-Paul, said she hoped Tate would admit he was responsible for the death and stop claiming it was an accident.

"All we were concerned about was that Lionel would take responsibility for his actions. That's basically what we've always wanted," she told Court TV after the hearing. "I do hope that Lionel will express remorse, at a minimum, for what occurred," Gov. Jeb Bush said Monday.

Tate's supporters said the teen will not make the same mistakes again.

"He's going to have to make the right choices and listen to the right people," said his trial attorney, Jim Lewis.

"Lionel's got a second chance and hopefully he's going to make it work – if he's got help."

KSU receives $9.5 million in federal research funds

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and the Manhattan community will benefit from legislation recently passed by the U.S. Senate.

K-State received about $9.5 million for research in various areas, including homeland security and bioterrorism.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., had a hand in obtaining the funding.

Sarah Ross, Roberts' press secretary, said the senator, a K-State alumnus, recognizes the contributions of K-State's research to the state and nation.

Ross said K-State researchers keep in contact with Roberts and inform him of research activities.

"In turn, Senator Roberts shows his colleagues the important contributions K-State can make in research areas," she said.

Sue Peterson, K-State director of governmental relations, said although the university receives funding from several places, including the state general fund, federal grants, competitive research grants, private funding and tuition, the federal funding allows the university to request funds for specific research projects that focus on K-State's strengths.

Forrest Chumley, associate director of research and extension, said the funding is crucial to research projects.

"This is very important funding, and it makes a big difference in the research we are able to do," he said. "These are very high priority areas for our state. The research reflects some of the biggest problems we are dealing with."

Peterson said K-State began applying for this funding in fall 2002.

She said that before K-State could submit requests in February 2002, faculty had to write proposals for federal funding, which were filtered first by deans and then by the University Federal Relations Committee.

The committee looked at the proposals' priorities in the scheme of the university's goals and chose the proposals for which K-State would request funding.

Chumley said that sometimes people have the wrong impression of this type of federal funding, calling it "pork barrel," or unwarranted funding. However, this is not the case, he said.

"This is very solid and vitally important research," he said. "This is one of the few ways we have of obtaining the funds we need to do this research, and we are very grateful when Congress pays attention to problems we are trying to solve."

High court to consider ban on executing teens

By Anne Gearan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"The practice of executing such offenders is a relic of the past and is inconsistent with evolving standards of decency in a civilized society."

John Paul Stevens
SUPREME COURT JUSTICE, 2002

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Supreme Court said Monday it will decide whether the Constitution forbids the execution of killers who were under 18 when they committed their crimes, the latest step in the court's reexamination of capital punishment in America.

The high court could ban the practice, as four justices have urged, or it could reaffirm earlier rulings that allowed states to decide for themselves whether to make 16- and 17-year-olds eligible for execution.

The court's answer, expected in the term that begins next fall, follows landmark decisions two years ago that banned the execution of the mentally retarded and required that juries, not judges, be the final arbiters of who is sent to death row.

The latest case turns on the Constitution's ban on "cruel and unusual punishments," just as the ruling did in the case involving mentally retarded killers.

"It's not to say that juveniles should not be held accountable for their crimes, but teenagers at that age are less mature, less able to assess risk, make good choices and control their anger and impulses," said Stephen Harper, who teaches juvenile justice law at the University of Miami.

"The argument has been that they shouldn't be subject to the ultimate punishment," because they are less culpable for their crimes than are adult killers, Harper said.

As in the case of mentally retarded killers, the latest case does not challenge the constitutionality of the death penalty as a whole.

The Supreme Court has allowed states to impose capital punishment since 1976, but has barred the practice for those who were younger than 16 at the time of their crimes.

The United States is nearly unique among nations in allowing the executions of very young killers, and the practice is rare even within the country.

Nationwide, just two teenage killers were sentenced to death last year, said Victor Streib, a law professor at Ohio Northern University and author of an annual report on the juvenile death penalty.

The four most liberal justices took an extraordinary step in the fall of 2002, signing a dissent in an appeal by a death row inmate that called it "shameful" to execute juvenile killers.

"The practice of executing such offenders is a relic of the past and is inconsistent with evolving standards of decency in a civilized society," Justice John Paul Stevens wrote then.

The rhetoric echoed the court's ruling months earlier that it is unconstitutional to execute the mentally retarded.

In that 6-3 ruling, the court gave great weight to the actions of state legislatures, many of which had acted on their own to ban the practice.

The court majority said, in effect, that times change and that the constitutionality of such executions changes with them.

The ruling drew fierce dissents from the court's three most conservative members, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, who view the Constitution as a more rigid document.

Club sports teams optimistic about semester

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From roller hockey and swimming, to lacrosse and women's softball, there is a full slate of club sports seasons getting underway this semester.

The men's lacrosse team is coming off a strong 2003 spring season in which it finished 9-1, its only loss coming in the Great Rivers Lacrosse Conference Championship. After gaining valuable experience in the fall, the team has high hopes.

"We're really not concerned with wins and losses in the fall it's just to get experience for the new guys," Bill Casper, junior midfielder, said. "Spring is what counts."

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Coach Jed Dunham is optimistic about the upcoming season, as well as the future of lacrosse at K-State. He said the atmosphere is ripe for the team to compete on a national level.

"This is a dynamite program. We have Memorial Stadium, the best lacrosse facility in the nation. We can be a powerhouse," he said. "The sky is the limit."

The initial goal is a conference championship, but the team jumps to the top club division next season, and Dunham hopes to contend for a national club championship in the next five years.

"The vision is to make lacrosse and Kansas State a synonymous name," he said.

The roller hockey team also is preparing for its spring lineup of games, which began Saturday in Kansas City against Fort Hays State in an exhibition game. The team plays the rest of its games in St. Louis.

Jerry Remsbecker, the team's faculty adviser, said the team practices from 7 to 9 p.m. Monday during the season at the Junction City Roundabout Rink.

Club president Mike Wolff, a senior forward, said practices are open to anyone, but only 15 players can suit up for games. He said the season will last at least until regionals in February and as long as April if the team continues to win in the postseason.

"We had a lot of younger players and made big strides in the fall season," club president Kasey Stadler said.

The K-State Swim Club is diving in again this semester as well. Senior Courtney Townsend, the former club president, said the club meets to swim Monday through Thursday at the Natatorium from 6-7:30 p.m.

She said practice sessions are open to anyone wanting to swim, stay fit and have fun.

The men's and women's rugby clubs also return to action this spring. Chris Sorensen, professor in the physics department, is the faculty adviser for both clubs. He said the teams practice twice a week and games begin in early March.

NASCAR revises championship system to increase fan interest

By Marshall Ice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"The changes will make all the races more fun to watch."

Brain Ross
SOPHOMORE IN FINANCE

NASCAR is revising its point system for the 2004 season. The hope is that the new format, called the "Chase for the Championship," will increase fan interest.

Following months of speculation, NASCAR announced the changes earlier this month.

A statement issued by NASCAR said the changes were made "to add excitement to every race and to provide a better balance between winning races and performing consistently."

Part of the problem is NASCAR's biggest event of the year, the Daytona 500, is at the start of the season. The NASCAR season starts Feb. 7 at the Budweiser Shootout in Daytona, Fla., and the Daytona 500 is Feb. 15.

NBC has announced plans to broadcast Daytona in high definition for the first time. The last race of 2004, the Ford 400, is slated for Nov. 21 at the Homestead-Miami Speedway.

Each season NASCAR crowns a champion through a points system previously known as the Winston Cup. The championship is now called the Nextel Cup.

NASCAR has scheduled 36 races this season. After the first 26 races, drivers in the top 10 and anyone within 400 points of the leader will earn a spot in the championship.

NASCAR decided on the 400 point cutoff after research showed no driver has ever come back from that far with only 10 races remaining.

The drivers who meet those qualifications will have their points adjusted for the last 10 races. The driver in first place will start with 5,050. Each driver from second place down will have five less points than the driver ahead of him.

Each driver will receive points just for participating in a race. The winner of each race earns 180 points. Second place is worth 175, the total previously given to a winning driver. The points are weighted down to the last-place driver, who gets 34.

Leading one lap of a race is worth an additional five points. The driver who is in the lead for the most laps of a race gets 10 points.

Awarding points to the winner of a pre-race pole was considered. However, winning a pole still does not earn season points.

Points are not the only thing on the line. At the end of the year, the Nextel Cup winner will receive a $5 million bonus. Drivers who finish in the Nextel top 10 are guaranteed at least $1 million each. The driver who finished 11th earns $250,000.

"I think it will be interesting to see how they do," said Brian Ross, sophomore in finance. "Last season, toward the end of the year it got boring to watch. It was all wrapped up before it was even over."

"The changes will make all the races more fun to watch," Ross said. "Especially at the end of the year."

Amazingly, had the new rules been in place last year, Kenseth would have finished only sixth. Jimmie Johnson, who was 90 points behind Kenseth, would have taken home the title.

NASCAR said "the new format will enhance competition all season long."

NASCAR chairman and CEO Brian France speaks to the news media about the new scoring system for NASCAR's Nextel Cup Series during a news conference in Concord, N.C., on Jan. 20. In a bid to add excitement and put more emphasis on winning, NASCAR changed its scoring system by setting up a showdown for the Nextel Cup championship during the season's last 10 races.

Other sports should model NASCAR's system change

JOSH WITT

In the worlds of life and sports there are few words that cause as much controversy as "change".

Change costs people their jobs – ask Bo Pelini.

Now change has rocked the NASCAR world.

First, the title of the sport's championship series has changed from the Winston Cup to the Nextel Cup.

But that move for a new head sponsor is insignificant compared to the decision by racing officials to change the system that crowns a racing champion.

NASCAR has elected to dramatically alter a championship series that has historically rewarded consistency instead of total wins over a season that stretches from February to November.

Now – in what is being billed as "The Chase for the Championship" – more of a playoff system is being implemented.

Under the new system, with 10 races to go, the points earned by each racer will be adjusted so only the top 10 Nextel Cup drivers will be able to contend for the title.

As is usually the case with change, the sport's traditionalists are not the biggest fans of the first dramatic alteration to the championship race since the 1970s.

Critics complain NASCAR is violating the age adage, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

They see the adjustments as a knee-jerk reaction to last year's season, which saw Matt Kenseth win a championship despite finding himself in the victory lane just once.

Some drivers, including the sports biggest superstar – Dale Earnhardt Jr. – have criticized the changes.

As a person who only in recent years has become a big fan, I realize I do not have the grasp of auto racing history that NASCAR's traditionalists.

However, after following last season, something needed to be done.

The championship race consisted of Kenseth jumping out to a big points lead, giving him the option of playing the system to his advantage.

He did so beautifully.

In the campaign's final two months he raced conservatively, knowing he did not have to win anymore – just finish in the top half.

Though the final NASCAR weekends still were enjoyable to watch, I, along with many other fans, was left unfulfilled as the championship winner was essentially decided with almost one- fourth of the season still remaining.

The beauty of the NFL, NBA and other sports is that the question of who will be champion is not answered until the very end.

That was not the case last year, and it was good to see NASCAR make a bold step in attempt to make the sport more exciting and competitive.

This past college football season provided the perfect example of what happens when a sport's governing body refuses to adjust a system no matter how ineffective it is.

It has been blatantly obvious for years that some sort of playoff system is needed in order to crown a true national champion of college football.

But the NCAA has been willing only to make minor adjustments in creating the Bowl Championship Series, which hardly helped in creating an undisputed champion this year.

Much respect to the guys at NASCAR.

NBA | Scott fired as Nets' coach

Scott

Byron Scott was fired Monday as coach of the New Jersey Nets, the team he led to the NBA Finals the past two seasons.

Scott's agent, Brian McInerney, confirmed the dismissal to the Associated Press. Assistant coach Lawrence Frank was expected to replace Scott, ESPN.com reported, citing league sources.

Scott was in his third season with the Nets and in the final year of his contract.

Management had refused to give him an extension while the team was for sale. It was sold Friday to developer Bruce Ratner, who plans to move the team to Brooklyn, N.Y.

Scott holds the franchise record with 149 coaching victories. After a 25-56 record in his first season, the Nets went 52-30 in 2001-02 and 49-33 in 2002-03 — losing to the Lakers and the Spurs in the finals.

Pitino

Pitino, 51, said the pain in his left side was "urological related," and that he had been dealing with it for four to five months. He said doctors have ruled out prostate cancer, but they have yet to determine what is causing Pitino pain.

Louisville (15-1) is ranked fourth in this week's AP Top 25 and has won 15 consecutive games. The Cardinals host Houston on Wednesday night.

Pitino said he did not know how many games he would miss.

NFL | Turner hired as Raider's head coach

Turner coached the Washington Redskins from 1994-00 — making the playoffs only once — and has been the Miami Dolphins' offensive coordinator the past two seasons.

He went 49-59-1 with the Redskins, his only NFL head coaching experience.

The Raiders said they would have an afternoon news conference with Turner. He replaces Bill Callahan, fired after two seasons as Oakland's head coach.

Callahan has since been hired as Nebraska's head coach.

Former Denver Broncos tight end Clarence Kay was arrested on suspicion of burglary and could face a domestic violence charge, police said.

Kay, 42, who played for the Broncos from 1984 to 1992, was accused of breaking into a former girlfriend's home in this Denver suburb on Saturday and grabbing her as she called 911, police spokesman Rudy Herrera said.

Kay was being held in the Arapahoe County jail on Sunday without bail.

Kay has a history of drug, alcohol and domestic problems that include multiple violations of restraining orders, Colorado Bureau of Investigation records show.

He was arrested 14 times between 1990 and 1997, the year of his last previous arrest, the records show.

NBA | McGrady ties league mark for 3's

Orlando's Tracy McGrady tied an NBA record by making eight 3-pointers in one half Monday night against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

McGrady, the league's second-leading scorer, scored 34 points in the first half on 10-of-14 shooting from the field and 6-of-8 on free throws.

Manhattan musicians

Jordan Brown, junior in psychology and guitarist and vocals for the band Clap, practices in his basement Sunday night.

Manhattan's size means national recognition for a local music scene can be practically impossible to come by, but this has not stopped local Manhattan bands the Pembertons, Three Rivers Kennedy and Clap from assembling three notable acts.

"We drink, we fish, we listen to Johnny Cash and Motorhead," Pembertons guitarist John Evans said.

The Pembertons are a quartet consisting of Dave Spiker on drums and vocals, Dave Boomer on bass, John Evans on guitar and vocals, and Bro Pemberton on guitar and vocals.

The Pembertons have put out one extended-play album called "Starting the Fire," which is out of print. However, a full-link album titled "Burn" is available at their shows or at Reverb Records, located inside Game Guy on North Manhattan Avenue.

To some, this might seem like a long venture to record an album, but Spiker explained the band's intentions.

"We wanted a change of scenery and a vacation. We also wanted our album to not sound like anything else in Manhattan."

Three Rivers Kennedy is another band that will be at Auntie Mae's in the near future. On March 9, the band will be playing with Clap at the venue.

Three Rivers Kennedy consists of Ben Gray on bass and vocals, Justin Peterson on drums, and Brandon Eck on guitars and vocals.

Three Rivers Kennedy's music can be enjoyed in one's own home in the near future. In February, the band's five-song EP will be available at their shows and Reverb Records.

The EP is titled "Slow Recorder," a slight pun on the time put into an album they began recording last January.

The band's name stems from a trip through southern Texas, Gray said.

"While traveling through southern Texas, I saw the town names Three Rivers and Kennedy on an exit sign on the highway, and they just stuck," he said.

Not only is the name a blatant reference to a sexually transmitted disease, but the members have been busy keeping their name visible throughout Aggieville due to a heavy concert load.

Clap's sound is drawn from many influences ranging from the Get Up Kids and the Anniversary, to Grandaddy. Some say they sound like emo rockers Piebald.

No matter whether their sound is called sort of pop, sort of rock, or sort of indie, the band members said their main goal is to always be fun and energetic.

"We scream sometimes, but always on pitch" Haag said.

Clap's new untitled EP, consisting of three songs from their band and three songs from Addictive Behavior, was done in the basement of their home.

Even though drummer Andy Lewis playfully suggested that "we all like to call each other expendable," Clap's do-it-yourself approach relied on each band member to contribute to the EP.

This new piece will be available on Feb. 6 at shows, Reverb Records, and possibly Sam Goody.

Bands in the area are known for speaking warmly about each other and are more than willing to spread the name of fellow musicians.

"No scene will get better if you trash other bands," Haag said.

Tea can boost immune system during winter months

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The uses of tea are as rich and varied as its flavors.

It can act both as a stimulant and as a sleeping aid. It has the power to battle illness, and it has the ability to warm the body. It played an integral role in the Revolutionary War, and the British pause each day to enjoy it.

In the throes of winter and this year's staggering flu season, it can help ensure good health for those who consume it.

Brent Aldridge, manager of Java Espresso & Bakery, said the jasmine green tea is a popular choice among those who suffer illness at the hands of the winter weather.

"We sell a lot of that," Aldridge said. "It's scented with the jasmine flower, and a lot of people drink it when they have a cold. They'll come in and get lemon- or lime-flavored teas, and they'll often ask for it with honey."

Aldridge said that during the spring, tea constitutes only 8 to 10 percent of Java's sales, but the onslaught of cold weather have made teas like chai particularly popular.

"It can boost your immune system and help your digestive system and help with hormonal problems."

Audrey Clowers
ASSISTANT MANAGER OF THE PEOPLE'S GROCERY COOPERATIVE EXCHANGE

"It's got a great flavor," he said. "It's an alternative to a sweetened hot tea, and it would be equivalent to a coffeelover's latte. "We make our chai tea with half milk. If you're not a coffeelover, it's a great alternative, since you get the sweet flavor. It's a well-rounded beverage."

Aldridge said any hot tea he sells in the winter tastes just as good in the summer.

"If they ask for it, we can seep it for five minutes and pour it over ice," he said. "We also can add torani syrups to our china gold iced tea."

Audrey Clowers, assistant manager of the People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange, said shoppers can arrange their own tea blends to enjoy at home.

"People can come in and make their own teas," she said. "We've got them all in bulk. Our bulk teas and herbs are pretty popular. It's a lot cheaper to buy a teaspoon for something in a recipe as opposed to buying the whole thing at Dillons."

Clowers said tea's main use during the flu season is safeguarding the immune system against infection, and that the store's sales of teas and other herbs skyrocket during the winter months.

"Most people buy it for medicinal reasons," Clowers said. "It can boost your immune system and help your digestive system and help with hormonal problems. You name it, there's an herb or tea that can fix it."

Did you know?
The history of tea

- The history of tea began more than 5,000 years ago in ancient China. According to myth, the emperor, Shen Nung, issued an edict that all drinking water be boiled as a "hygienic precaution." One day, during the boiling process, some leaves from a nearby bush fell into the water, turning the liquid brown and giving it a distinct flavor. The emperor enjoyed the beverage so much that its popularity quickly spread throughout Asia.
- The fluoride in tea can help ensure strong teeth.
- Studies conducted within the last three years show that green, black and red teas possess cancer-fighting agents.

Snow storms blamed for 34 deaths in eastern United States

By Roger Petterson

"We need to get food and fuel to their necessary destinations, and right now the weather is not cooperating."

Paul Peters
STEAMSHIP AUTHORITY SPOKESWOMAN

A pair of storms spread snow, sleet and freezing rain across the eastern half of the nation, glazing highways with treacherous ice as far south as Georgia and closing schools and government offices Monday.

The weather was blamed for at least 34 deaths, most of them traffic related, on Sunday and Monday.

The heaviest snowfall was 23 inches at Duluth, Minn., as moist air swept inland from Lake Superior. Drifting snow closed about 70 miles of Interstate 29 overnight in North Dakota, between Fargo and Grand Forks.

Because of the I-29 shutdown, more than 250 truckers had to spend the night at the Stamart truck stop on the outskirts of Fargo, said desk manager Michelle Martens.

"They were parked everywhere _ everywhere they could find a spot," Martens said. They were allowed to get back on the road Monday. "To see them leaving, it was just truck to truck to truck," she said.

Schools were closed from Nebraska and Missouri to the Carolinas and northern Georgia. Businesses and government offices were closed in North and South Carolina and in Virginia. Delta Air Lines delayed or canceled some 300 flights Monday out of Atlanta because of the weather in the Midwest and East.

One of the two storms scattered snow Monday along an arc from the western Plains to Minnesota and Wisconsin, then eastward across the Great Lakes into Pennsylvania and New York. Snow was likely in parts of the Northeast on Tuesday.

The other storm spread snow and ice on Sunday from Kansas east to Maryland, Virginia and the Carolinas. "Central Missouri is pretty much frozen up today," said Jim Morris, spokesman for the Missouri Education Department.

The Washington, D.C., area got up to 7 inches of snow, its heaviest snowfall of the season.

Ice brought down tree branches and power lines, knocking out electricity to thousands of customers throughout the region. More freezing rain fell Monday in South Carolina, where an additional half-inch of ice was possible.

North Carolina Gov. Mike Easley declared a state of emergency, and the state put about 1,000 National Guardsmen on standby. Many people simply hunkered down.

Relentless cold rather than snow was the problem in the Northeast, where Coast Guard cutters have been busy breaking ice in the busy shipping lanes of Boston Harbor and south of Cape Cod. It is the region's worst ice in about 11 years, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Andrew Shinn.

Thick ice has shut down ferry service between Hyannis, Mass., and the island of Nantucket, 25 miles off the coast.

"This is a crisis situation for the island of Nantucket," Steamship Authority spokeswoman Paul Peters said. "We need to get food and fuel to their necessary destinations, and right now the weather is not cooperating."

The weather was blamed for six deaths in South Carolina; five each in Iowa, North Carolina and Missouri; three each in Nebraska and Ohio; two each in Indiana and Minnesota; and one each in Kansas, Maryland and West Virginia.

The fatalities included a teenager killed Sunday in Missouri when his sled ran into the path of a pickup truck, and a man who died Monday near Columbus, Ohio, when his tractor overturned while he plowed his driveway.

State considers abolishing education board

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. – Two House Republicans introduced a proposal Monday to abolish the State Board of Education and replace it with a secretary of education appointed by the governor.

The measure is a proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution and, if approved by two-thirds of both the House and Senate, would be put to a statewide vote Nov. 2.

Similar attempts to abolish the 10-member board have failed in the past.

Ballou, echoing arguments made in previous years, said education is important enough to require a Cabinet-level adviser to the governor.

Detractors sometimes describe the board as a "fourth branch" of state government because it can set education policy independently of the Legislature.

Since 1974, voters have rejected three proposed amendments to eliminate the board or to take away its power.

Last year, the Senate rejected a proposed amendment to add three members, appointed by the governor, to the board.

Divers search waters for missing U.S. soldiers in Iraq

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Insurgents fired a rocket at the headquarters of the U.S.-led coalition Monday night after gunmen killed seven Iraqi policemen in a pair of attacks west of Baghdad. A senior Iraqi official blamed al-Qaeda for many of the suicide bombings around the country in recent weeks.

In the north, military divers searched the muddy waters of the Tigris River for three missing U.S. soldiers, including two pilots of an OH-58D Kiowa Warrior helicopter that crashed Sunday in Mosul during rescue operations after a patrol boat capsized.

It was the fifth U.S. helicopter lost in Iraq this month – three from hostile fire.

Strong explosions reverberated through the heart of this troubled capital about 10:35 p.m., followed by sirens and a recorded message warning those in the coalition headquarters compound known as the green zone to "take cover."

A coalition official said at least one rocket, apparently fired from across the Tigris, exploded in a parking lot near the Republican Palace, used by America's top civilian administrator in Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, and senior coalition staff, but it caused no damage or casualties.

The attack occurred three days after a U.N. security assessment team arrived in Baghdad to determine whether it is safe for the United Nations to return its international staff to Iraq.

Secretary-General Kofi Annan withdrew international staff last year following two vehicle bombings against the U.N. headquarters here, including the Aug. 19 attack that killed 22 people, among them the top U.N. envoy, Sergio Vieira de Mello.

The attack on the green zone took place a day after the seven policemen were slain in two separate attacks at checkpoints around the city of Ramadi, 70 miles west of Baghdad in the Sunni Triangle, a center of resistance to the U.S.-run occupation. Iraqi police who reported the attacks made no mention of any insurgent casualties.

Attacks against U.S. forces and their Iraqi allies have persisted despite the Dec. 13 arrest of Saddam Hussein, who was captured near his hometown of Tikrit. Many of the victims have been Iraqi civilians.

One Iraqi man was killed Monday when he stepped on a roadside bomb as he got off a bus in a Baghdad suburb, Iraqi Civil Defense Corps 2nd Lt. Mustafa Tariq said.

Late Monday, a roadside bomb exploded in a west Baghdad neighborhood, wounding one civilian and damaging at least three vehicles, witnesses said.

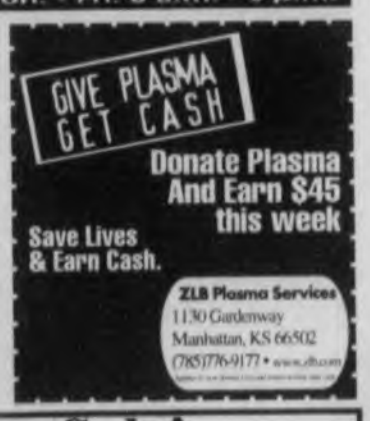
Elsewhere, two projectiles exploded for a second straight day Monday at the U.S. military base in Kirkuk, Iraqi police said, but there were no reports of damage or casualties. Witnesses also reported explosions near a Spanish garrison outside of Najaf, but the Spanish Defense Ministry said the base was not attacked.

Earlier Monday, the government minister in charge of internal security blamed al-Qaeda for some of the attacks, especially suicide car bombings throughout the country.

These include the Aug. 19 truck bombing at the U.N. headquarters in Baghdad that killed 22 people, among them the top U.N. envoy, Sergio Vieira de Mello.

"There is a presence of al-Qaeda in this country," Interior Minister Nouri Badran said. "We've announced that directly and indirectly. A lot of the suicide attacks have the fingerprints of the crimes committed by al-Qaeda."

Badran offered no specific evidence to support his claim, and U.S. military officials have said they believe the overwhelming majority of attacks have been the work of Iraqis loyal to Saddam. However, a U.S. official in Washington said Saturday that Kurdish forces had captured a senior al-Qaeda figure as he tried to enter northern Iraq.



Hassan Ghul, a senior facilitator in Osama bin Laden's terror network, was turned over to the United States and is being interrogated at an undisclosed location, the official said on condition of anonymity.

On Monday, President Bush praised Ghul's capture, saying it was an example of "further progress in making America more secure." Bush told an audience in Little Rock, Ark., that Ghul reported directly to Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, who was captured last March near Islamabad, Pakistan. "He was a killer," Bush said of Ghul.

"He was moving money and messages around South Asia and the Middle East to other al-Qaeda leaders. He was a part of this network of haters that we're dismantling."

Egyptian rescuers look for victims of a 12-story building collapse in a Cairo suburb Monday, after a fire broke out in the lower floors. At least 29 people were injured and 18 trapped in the rubble, police said.

By Mohamed Khalifa
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt – A 12-story building that had drawn police attention for alleged illegal renovations collapsed in a Cairo suburb during a fire Monday night, killing at least five people, including three firefighters.

At least 10 people remained trapped in the rubble.

Rescuers pulled a fire brigade officer alive from the rubble, his face covered with dust.

He was taken to an ambulance amid cries of "Allahu Akbar," or God is Great, from onlookers.

Rescue crews worked into Tuesday trying to free those trapped in the building, police said.

Most were police officers and firefighters who had been dispatched to put out the blaze, police said.

The bodies of three firefighters and a private citizen were removed from the rubble, according to Egypt's semiofficial Middle East News Agency. Eleven people remained trapped, it reported Tuesday morning.

Thirty three people were hospitalized, but there was no immediate word on their conditions.

The owner of the building had illegally added four floors 12 years ago and ignored an order to tear them down, police said.

Tenants had also complained to police six days ago about renovations in the store where the fire began; they feared the work would damage the building's foundations.

The officials first said the fire broke out at an Egyptian fast-food restaurant on the ground floor, but later reported it began at the adjacent store.

A police officer at the scene, briefing reporters afterward, also said 16 people were trapped.

The unnamed officer identified the civilians as workers in the store where the fire started.

But the Middle East News Agency quoted Cairo security chief Nabil el-Ezzabi as saying eight people, including three policemen, remained trapped about three hours after the collapse.

It was not clear if the discrepancy was because people had been pulled out of the rubble.

The building, built in 1981, was in Nasr City, an eastern suburb of the Egyptian capital near the airport.

The structure collapsed accordion-style into a pile of rubble about two stories high.

Several satellite dishes rested intact on the roof, and a panda toy, slippers, bags and a brass pot were scattered in the debris.

Police sealed off the area and evacuated two buildings that were damaged by the collapse, while firefighters and policemen worked under floodlights to rescue their trapped colleagues.

Rescuers cleared rubble by hand in search of survivors for several hours and were joined by bulldozers early Tuesday.

Building collapses are common in Egypt and are often caused by shoddy construction or the unauthorized building of extra stories.

The last such incident was May 4, when a seven-story apartment building collapsed in Cairo, killing at least seven people.

WEAPONS | Bush administration reels from report stating pre-war weapons intelligence was misleading

"Basically they're dominating the news as much as the president is these days, and if they continue to criticize the president on this, then it begins to hurt a little bit.

"But basically he is doing so well in the polls at this point, on the economy but also even on the war, that I don't see it as a major hit," Thurber said.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle called for an investigation – either by the Senate Intelligence Committee or an independent commission – into the "administration's role in the intelligence failures leading up to the war with Iraq."

Sen. Joe Lieberman, another Democratic candidate, campaigning in New Hampshire, also urged an investigation or congressional hearings "on the intelligence that some of us saw directly, and the statements that the administration was making and the emphasis the administration was putting on weapons of mass destruction."

Vice President Dick Cheney, meeting in Rome with Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi, did not answer when a reporter asked if he felt pre-war intelligence was faulty.

Cheney was one of the administration's most forceful advocates of war and was outspoken in describing Iraq's alleged threat.

Kerry has questioned whether Cheney tried to pressure CIA analysts who wrote reports on Iraq's weapon programs.

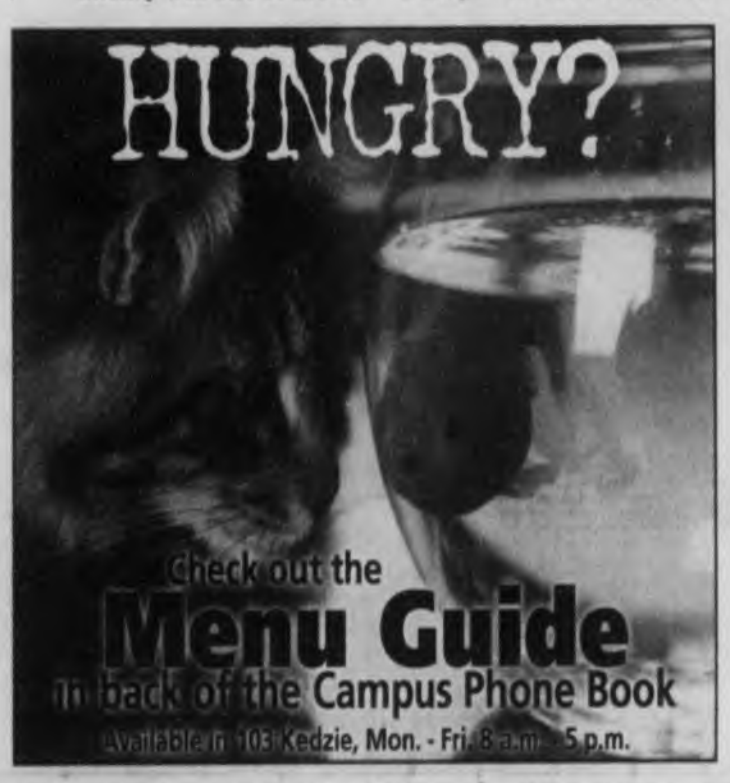
A senior administration official on the Cheney trip said the "jury is still out" on whether the intelligence accurately reflected what kind of weapons were in Iraq.

"Obviously we want to compare the intelligence from before the war with what the Iraq Survey Group learns on the ground," McClellan said.

Attorney General John Ashcroft, traveling in Vienna, Austria, said the Iraq war was justified, even if banned weapons are never found, because it eliminated the threat that Saddam might again resort to "evil chemistry and evil biology."

Saddam's willingness to use such weapons was sufficient cause to overthrow his regime, Ashcroft said, referring to the use of chemical and biological arms against Iraqi Kurds in 1988 and during the 1980s Iran-Iraq war. McClellan made the same point.

"The decision to remove Saddam Hussein's regime from power was the right decision," he said. "Saddam Hussein was a dangerous and gathering threat, and the president made the right decision to remove him from power."



Even before Kay announced his conclusion, Bush had changed his public rationale about the war as the search for weapons proved fruitless.

Bush cast it as a broader war against terrorism, calling Iraq the central front, and said democracy would spread in the Middle East if it took hold in Iraq.

In London, British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw said it was disappointing that inspectors have not found evidence "of what the whole of the international community believes, and genuinely believed, about weapons programs and weapons stockpiles which Saddam had."

Asked whether Bush owed the nation an explanation for the discrepancies between his warnings and Kay's findings, Kay said, "I actually think the intelligence community owes the president, rather than the president owing the American people."

Guards' play essential to Cat victory against KU

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State backcourt played arguably its best game of the season Jan. 14, resulting in a near-win against the Kansas Jayhawks

For the Wildcats to contend again with the 15th ranked team in the country, the same effort could be essential.

Wildcat guards struggle as much as they have all year.

With the exception of a solid performance from senior Jarrett Hart, the Wildcat backcourt was rattled by Oklahoma's zone defense throughout the game.

Hart scored 16 points and had four assists with no turnovers in the contest.

On the other end of the spectrum was senior guard Frank Richards, who failed to score and committed six of the team's 21 turnovers.

Despite the sub-par game, Hart sees a positive team morale heading into Wednesday night.

"Everybody's heads are up," Hart said. "We play too many games in this league to think about the last game."

As volume two of this season's interstate rivalry approaches, Wildcat faithful and Coach Jim Wooldridge are likely crossing their fingers that the play of Ellis and Richards can revert back to the first contest in Lawrence.

In that Jan. 14 clash at Allen Fieldhouse, the duo lit up the Jayhawks for a combined 35 points on 50 percent shooting from the field.

Perhaps more significantly, Ellis had no turnovers while Richards had five assists to just two giveaways.

That kind of efficient play could prove to be the overriding factor in who wins Wednesday night's game, as Kansas boasts one of the elite point guards in the Big 12 in conference assist leader junior, Aaron Miles.

Women hope to recover from loss to Nebraska; Cats face Baylor tonight

Game will test team morale after devastating defeat to Huskers; upset-minded Lady Bears to challenge Wildcats in 7 p.m. tipoff

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's basketball team will attempt to rebound from its first conference loss of the season when the Wildcats square off against the Baylor Lady Bears at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

The unranked Huskers ran away from No. 9 K-State and whipped the Wildcats 81-63, snapping 11-game winning streak.

Senior center Nicole Ohlde, who finished with 14 points in the loss, said she is looking forward to getting back on the court and putting the loss to Nebraska behind her.

"It makes me really hungry. I think anybody on our team could say that," Ohlde said.

"I'm definitely angry at the fact that we played like that and just hungry for Tuesday's game."

K-State will have to come more prepared for Baylor if it wants a different result than the one in Nebraska.

The No. 24 Bears stand at 16-3 overall and 4-2 in Big 12 Conference play.

Baylor will come to Manhattan confident after topping No.15 Oklahoma 74-67 in Norman.

Senior guard Jessika Stratton scored 20 points, and sophomore guard Chameka Scott hit two off-balance jumpers in the final two minutes in Saturday's contest to propel the Lady Bears past the Sooners.

Baylor trailed by as many as 13 points in the first half and rallied behind Stratton's 4-of-5 effort from the 3-point line for the road upset.

Sophomore forward Sophia Young used a career-high 27 points against Washington State to move into the lead for the Lady Bears in both scoring and rebounding average.

Young is averaging a team-leading 17.3 points and 8.6 rebounds an outing.

Junior Steffanie Blackmon ranks second in both categories with 14.3 points and 6.4 rebounds while freshman forward Emily Nieman has also been a solid addition to the Lady Bears, averaging 10.1 points per game.

Baylor is outscoring its opponents by 24.3 points per game and is shooting a league-leading .491 percent on the season.

The team has shot .500 or above in 11 of the 18 games, and shot .661 against Sam Houston State.

The Lady Bears have been strong on the defensive end as well. Baylor is holding opponents to just 56 points a game with a .331 shooting average.

Tigers enter game with momentum

Wildcats' Saturday opponent gaining confidence after slow start

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will have to battle not only the demons of an 0-5 road record this season, but also a Missouri Tiger team that appears close to jumping on the right track.

Going into the week's competition, the Tigers (8-7, 3-2) are riding a wave of momentum following their most impressive victory of the young conference season.

"When you win, you gain confidence, and we played well tonight," Snyder said following the victory.

Gaining confidence could be huge for the Tigers, who were Final Four picks by many in the preseason.

The Tigers have fallen far short of expectations this year, suffering losses ranging from heartbreaking – an overtime loss to Texas – to embarrassing – a four-point home loss to Belmont.

"When you win, you gain confidence, and we played well tonight."

Quin Snyder
MISSOURI COACH

"I think we're happy where we're at," Paulding said. "We're just going to keep growing, and we're finding it a bit right now."

K-State (9-6,1-3) has not beat Missouri in its last five tries and will have its hands full with a Missouri defense that only allowed 51 points to Nebraska and an offense that has showcased considerable firepower at times.

Although their numbers are slightly down from last year, Paulding averages 16 points per game, and Johnson puts up 13 points and almost eight rebounds per contest.

Complementing senior leaders are Linas Kleiza and Thomas Gardner, who have sparked the Tigers in the same way K-State freshmen Cartier Martin and Dez Willingham have energized the Wildcats at certain points in the season.

Kleiza has proven to be one of the top freshmen in the conference, averaging 11 points and nearly eight rebounds a game.

Snyder said he was not impressed only with Gardner's offensive numbers.

"Well, I thought Thomas's emotion is big, and I think we all have to be that way," Snyder said.

Aside from a similar search for identity, the Tigers and Wildcats share something else in common.

Both schools have had runins with the NCAA this year.

K-State forwards Dramane Diarra and Cartier Martin both were forced to miss several games by the NCAA due to questions relating to violation of amateur status.

The NCAA's actions against on Missouri could prove to be much more severe.

On Sept. 24, an official investigation began into suspected academic violations by the Tiger program, stemming from revelations regarding former player Ricky Clemons and illegal assistance he might have received.

Sooners hope to snap losing streak

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 15 Oklahoma Sooners (13-4, 3-3) travel to Missouri today and Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday with hopes of snapping a two-game losing streak.

OU lost 69-51 at Iowa State Jan. 20 and failed to hold off a Baylor comeback Saturday, losing 74-67 to the Lady Bears.

Oklahoma is averaging 40.6 points in the second half, as opposed to 35.3 points in the first half. OU is one of the best offensive scoring teams in the Big 12, averaging 76.6 points per game and racked up 80-plus points against eight different opponents this season.

Rebounding and defensive pressure are focal points for Oklahoma. The Sooners rank first in the Big 12 in scoring defense, by allowing 55.2 points per game field goal percentage, holding opponents to 32.4 percent; and steals, swiping 11.2 per game in conference play. OU's 7.8-rebound average ranks third in league play.

K-State's Laurie Koehn has her shot blocked by Nebraska's Margaret Richards during the Wildcats' loss to the Huskers in Lincoln.

Zach Long
COLLEGIAN

Oklahoma's Maria Villarroel ranks eighth in the Big 12 Conference in scoring with 14.8 points per game. Dionnah Jackson leads the Sooners with 4.9 assists and 2.6 steals per game, which is third and second in the Big 12.

Although 10 of the 14 players on the Oklahoma roster are underclassmen, the Sooners have leadership in senior captains Caton Hill and Maria Villarroel. The two lead the team in scoring and rank among the top rebounders.

KU-K-State game short of sell-out

Bramlage's atmosphere crucial as Cats face Jayhawks Wednesday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last time K-State took on Kansas, 16,300 fans witnessed the Wildcats lose to the Jayhawks at Allen Fieldhouse by only six points.

It was the largest crowd the Wildcats have played in front of this season.

In Wednesday's rematch, the teams are the same, but the venue and the size of the crowd will be different.

As of Monday, 10,200 tickets have been sold for game two of the Sunflower Showdown at Bramlage Coliseum, leaving the Wildcats home arena 3,000 short of a sell-out.

Athletic ticket manager, Bobby Howell said even though Bramlage is not sold out, ticket sales have been steady since Jan. 1.

"Unfortunately, we are not sold out, but ticket sales have been steady," Howell said.

Howell also said the recent bad weather has been a factor.

"With the weather being bad, it has slowed our ticket sales. But if the weather turns nice, we should have a good walk-in turnout for the game," Howell said.

Although the crowd may be smaller than the first game between the Wildcats and Jayhawks, Coach Jim Wooldridge said the atmosphere of a home game is important.

"The atmosphere of any home game plays well for the home team," Wooldridge said.

"We should have a good crowd, and we will try and protect our home floor."

For the seniors, it will be their last chance to face their in-state rivals.

"The atmosphere of any home game plays well for the home team. We should have a good crowd and we will try and protect our home floor."

Jim Wooldridge
MEN'S HEAD BASKETBALL COACH

Senior guard, Jarrett Hart is looking forward to playing in front of the home crowd.

"Everyone has stuck with us, and it's nice to have all the support," Hart said.

Another senior, guard Tim Ellis, also said the home crowd will be a motivational tool for the Wildcats.

"We are going to have a lot of support from the fans," Ellis said.

"It will feel good to have the hands turned around and have a lot of people cheering for you."

For freshman guard Dez Willingham, the chance to play Kansas at home for the first time will be exciting.

"I can't wait to see it," Willingham said.

"It's going to be exciting, and hopefully we can come out with a win."

Earlier in the year, the Wildcats hosted the Oklahoma State Cowboys in front of 10,839 fans, the largest crowd the K-State men have played in front of at home this season.

"I play against Frank Richards every day, and he's been in the Big 12 for quite a while," Willingham said. "It's nothing I haven't seen before."

As Wooldridge prepares the strategy for containing the explosive KU guards, there might be a lineup change – possibly at the guard position.

"There might be several changes to the lineup," Wooldridge said Monday.

While the combination of Richards, Ellis and Hart have started almost every game this season, Wooldridge elected to start Willingham the second half of the Oklahoma game in place of Richards.

Willingham – who will be entering his third game back after a shoulder injury – has shown ability to jump-start a sometimes stagnant offense with his speed and court vision.

No matter who starts, the Wildcats are poised to break a 27-game losing streak to the Jayhawks and beat their rivals at home for the first time since 1983.

"We were already talking about if we win everybody's going to run out on the court," Willingham said.

Wal-Mart Supercenter schedules grand opening for mid-March

Manhattan shoppers will be able to buy clothes and groceries in the same store when the Wal-Mart Supercenter opens March 17.

"There is still some minor construction being done as far as wiring," Roy Hulett, store manager, said.

The specialty shops that will be located at the front of the store are in various building stages, he said.

"We will have a Smart Styles Hair Salon, a Vision Center, a Portrait Studio, a Central National Bank and a California Nails nail salon," he said.

More than a thousand applications have been completed for positions at the new store, but only about 20 percent of applicants will be hired.

"Currently we are looking at 200 new jobs," Hulett said. "At the point where we are open and we see how much business we have, we will begin to hire more based on that."

Hulett said Wal-Mart will not put merchandise into the new building until early February.

"We will take some out of the store we are currently in and the company will start shipping merchandise to the new building," he said. "We will be open in this store until the day before the other one opens even if that means bringing merchandise back from the new building to this one."

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said Hobby Lobby will take half the space of the

Bombings kill 6 U.S. soldiers

By Hamza Hendawi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq - The United Nations agreed Tuesday to send a team to Iraq to help break the impasse over electing a new government, as the deaths of six more American soldiers in roadside bombings underscored concerns about security in the volatile nation.

A bomb that exploded south of Baghdad killed three U.S. soldiers and wounded three others Tuesday night, hours after another bombing west of the capital killed three U.S. paratroopers and wounded one, the military said.

In addition, two employees of Cable News Network died in a shooting south of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, U.S. troops killed three suspected members of a guerrilla cell during raids Tuesday

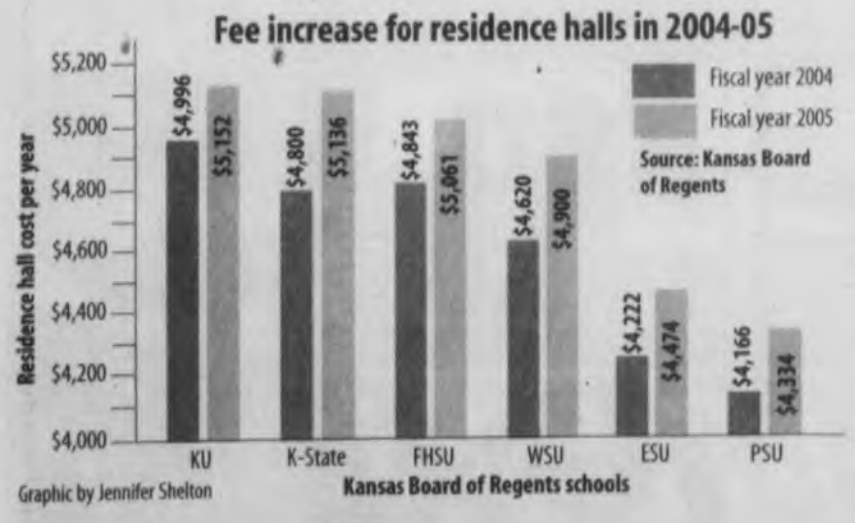
Kerry victorious in N.H. primary

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



MANCHESTER, N.H. – John Kerry overpowered Howard Dean to win New Hampshire's primary Tuesday, a second-straight campaign victory for the newly minted Democratic presidential front-runner.

"I ask Democrats everywhere to join us so we can defeat George W. Bush and the economy of privilege," Kerry told supporters cheered by his political revival.

K-State's residence halls' fees will increase at a similar rate to other Big 12 Conference universities

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In-depth
Residence halls

K-State's 7 percent increase in residence hall fees is the largest percentage increase of all Regents universities in Kansas, according to the Kansas Board of Regents statistics.

The Regents' report shows all Regents schools will experience rises in residence hall fees to varying degrees.

Bob Burgess, associate director for administrative services for the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said although K-State's fees may be greater than other Kansas schools, it is important to realize K-State's fees still compare favorably with the rates of other Big 12 universities.

"Some schools in the Big 12 have not officially set their rates yet," Burgess said. "Once it's all said and done, I would imagine our rates will probably be one of the lowest among Big 12 schools."

Burgess also said the increase in fees was partly due to K-State's commitment to continually upgrading the residence and dining halls.

Diana Robertson, associate director for residence life at the University of Kansas, said the 3.1 percent increase in fees KU saw for the upcoming academic year was due in part to an increase in general expenses, including the cost of living and utility costs.

"We had no increases that were specifically attributed to or earmarked for dorm renovation," Robertson said. "However, we try to stay aware of what might be coming."

Boeing stays
Boeing Co. chief executive Harry Stonecipher reassured Kansas politicians his company's future will always include Wichita. Stonecipher said he was "blindsided" by a weekend story in The Seattle Times reporting Boeing was considering the sale of its facility in Wichita, said, Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan.

Iraq's threat
President Bush said Iraq undoubtedly posed a threat to America last year and the U.S.-led invasion was justified, despite his outgoing arms inspector's conclusion that Saddam Hussein had no weapons of mass destruction.

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

2 students mugged on Northwestern's campus

A student was riding her bicycle past a group of four men when one man knocked her to the ground. The other men looked on and laughed, but ran when the student screamed for help.

An hour later, four men attacked a Loyola student who was visiting friends at NU, said Assistant Police Chief Daniel McAleer. The men took his wallet, which contained $7 and a driver's license.

Twelve students have been robbed or assaulted since October, spurring students to lobby administrators for better lighting and more night patrols.

ROACHES INVADE KU HALL

LAWRENCE – When graduate student Andrew Dzialowski bought his $150 printer, he had no idea he was also buying a condo for a swarm of creepy office mates in Haworth Hall.

About a year after he put the printer in his office, he smelled something funny. As he printed, insect limbs and roach feces littered the pages. When the printer jammed, he discovered about 50 roaches had made his printer their home.

FACULTY ON STRIKE

HONOLULU – About 200 University of Hawaii faculty staged an "informational strike" Friday at Kapi'olani Community College to show their frustration over an informal salary proposal the state offered.

Demonstrators want to bring faculty salaries up to the 50th percentile rank among peer institutions.

CRACKED ICE

MINNEAPOLIS – A men's hockey game between No. 5 Minnesota and No. 1 North Dakota was just warming up when referees stopped the game.

The arena crew worked on the ice for 51 minutes – pouring water into the cracks and blowing fire extinguishers to help freeze the spot – before play resumed.

PROTESTING 40-PERCENT TUITION INCREASE

The bill would make tuition increases solely applicable to the University of Arizona's incoming class and let students enrolled in at least 12 credit hours the semester before a tuition or fee increase attend school at the cheaper rate.

A group of students brought a lawsuit saying the hike violated the state constitution's requirement that instruction at state schools be "as nearly free as possible."

City's parking fines likely to increase

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city of Manhattan is discussing changing a law that has gone untouched for more than 20 years.

Jason Hilgers, assistant to the city manager, said the city is discussing raising parking fines in the Aggieville and downtown business areas from the current $2, as it has been since 1981, to either $3 or $5.

"This has come as a result of being approached by business organizations from both downtown and Aggieville," he said.

Hilgers said the businesses were concerned with a lack of parking spaces due to visitors remaining in the same place for an extended period of time.

About every five years, the topic of parking fines comes up at meetings, but the city decided to give it more consideration this year after viewing the results of a survey given to businesses in the two affected shopping districts, he said.

The city began supervising the parking enforcement officers in January after the Riley County Police Department asked it to take the job.

"This is more in an effort to deter future violations than to increase revenue for the city," he said.

However, Hilgers said, the city would like to receive enough money from parking tickets to pay the salaries of the two officers the city employs.

"From the beginning, the budget on the two parking officers was right around $79,000, and fines themselves weren't being generated to meet that level," he said.

Hilgers said the survey contained a proposal regarding a progressive parking fine system, in which habitual violators would be punished more severely than a one-time violator.

This system would require the purchase of a hand-held electronic device to track violators.

The results of the survey, he said, showed an overwhelming desire to see a flat fee increase rather than the progressive scale.

"Businesses did not support this," Hilgers said.

Since shoppers do not have to pay for parking on the east or west sides of town, businesses expressed concern they might lose customers to those areas if fines were too extensive.

Bernie Hayen, chief financial officer for the city, said he believes a progressive system would be the most sensible.

"I think a progressive scale would make sense," he said. "People view small fines as worth it."

Hayen said progressive fines would be more effective in sending the message that the city has the ability and the desire to ensure the system is not abused.

He expressed a concern, however, that such a policy might adversely affect out-of-town shoppers.

"Clearly Manhattan is becoming more of a regional shopping draw," he said. "This would ensure that those who abuse the initial minimum parking amounts are punished and create more parking spaces."

Manhattan Mayor Mark Taussig said he supports the progressive scale increases.

"The direction I would like to go would be no fine on the first ticket, $5 on the second and $10 on the third and so on," he said.

"We're not doing this to make money, we're trying to free up spaces for people to park."

Hundreds rally for bill giving immigrants driver's licenses

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Hundreds of people rallied Tuesday in favor of a bill to permit illegal immigrants to obtain temporary driver's licenses, but a man whose son died in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks called the measure "indecent."

The bill would create a new "temporary" residence license and eliminate a prohibition in Kansas law against issuing a license to anyone "not lawfully present in the United States." The House narrowly approved the measure last year, and the Senate Judiciary Committee heard conflicting and sometimes passionate testimony Tuesday.

Supporters told the committee the bill would make the state's roads and highways safer by regulating drivers who have gone unregulated previously. Backers of the bill included attorneys, law enforcement officials and members of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' administration.

Also, Hispanic activists said the measure would recognize the growing number of immigrants in Kansas and their contributions to the state's economy.

"Hispanics are doing the Lord's work – we're populating this earth, basically," said Elias Garcia, executive director of the Kansas Advisory Commission on Hispanic Affairs. "Quite bluntly, let me say that we're not going anywhere. This is our home."

But critics said the bill would undermine homeland security and make it easier for terrorists to operate. One opponent was Peter Gadiel, Kent, Conn., whose son, James, a 23-year-old assistant securities trader, died at the World Trade Center in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

"To those of us whose sons, husbands, daughters, sisters and mothers were murdered on Sept. 11, the idea that any state would even think giving official, valid ID to a person who is not lawfully in this country is indecent," he said.

As the committee met, more than 1,000 people, mostly Hispanic, rallied outside the Statehouse in support of the measure. They marched several blocks from Assumption Church, with the temperature below 5 degrees.

Columnist seeks logic behind John Kerry's Iowa primary win

SCOTT SEEL

The people of Iowa have spoken, and they have said they want Ted Kennedy – or John Kerry as his name appears on the ballot – to be the next Democratic candidate for president. As a result of my bewilderment with this decision, I have composed the following letter to Iowa Democrats.

Dear Iowa Democrats,

Upon your decision to side with John Kerry, I felt the need to write this letter in the hope of breaking down and maybe, just maybe, understanding why you made such a decision.

DEAN IS NOT ELECTABLE

Could it be that you think Howard Dean is not electable?

A noble concern, but one must examine this further.

Throughout Iowa, conservative activist groups have been flooding the airwaves with anti-Dean messages that hailed Dean as a left-wing "latte-drinking," "body-piercing," "tax-hiking" liberal. Republicans, such as Kansas Sen. Pat Roberts publicly attack Dean.

The question is, why are they doing this?

Do they just enjoy mudslinging and want to jump on any opportunity to attack some crazy liberal? Doubtful.

This isn't Ann Coulter calling someone an antichrist in her weekly psychopathic rant; this is activist groups spending millions to get their message out and politicians publicly staking their reputation to attack Dean.

The only logical reason is they think Dean poses a threat to them and their network of rich, white cronies. Dean is the candidate who invokes fear in the hearts of conservatives in this country. Not John Kerry, not John Edwards and certainly not any of the other chimps remaining in this race.

Nope, it can't be that.

DEAN IS A WEALTHY, ELITIST NEW ENGLAND LIBERAL

Maybe you think Dean was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. I mean, after all, his grandmother was a bridesmaid at Barbara Bush's mother's uncle's best friend's wedding or whatever, so he must be a spoiled little brat.

Given the advertisements in Iowa attacking Dean, this is obviously the argument conservatives want you to make.

I suppose this might (key word: might) make some sense, but look at the selection you made. John Kerry, the junior senator from Massachusetts, is married to the heiress of the Heinz Ketchup fortune. Kerry hails from Boston, the bastion of New England liberalism.

To be fair, Kerry and his wife don't live in Boston all year. They also own homes in Idaho, Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, and one on the island of Nantucket.

Couldn't be that.

HOWARD DEAN "FLIP-FLOPS" ON POSITIONS

In September, Gephardt attacked a statement made by the Vermont governor, saying, "In the midst of the so-called 'Republican Revolution,' Howard Dean actually agreed with the Gingrich Republicans.

"His home-state newspaper reported again and again how Howard Dean supported turning Medicare into a managed care program."

Uh-oh, someone changed their stance on an issue after 12 years? What I want, and apparently what you want, too, is a politician who will never, ever change his or her stance on an issue, regardless of factors that may change over a decade.

No, the people of Iowa are smarter than this.

DEAN COMMITS A LOT OF GAFFES

For instance, a comment he made was interpreted as claiming all Southerners are pick-up truck-driving white people sporting Confederate flag decals. The statement was undoubtedly a mistake, but I think the intent of his comment is noble.

Could it be Dean wants even the most conservative of conservatives to vote for him? Is it possible he wants people to realize that his campaign is not about politics, but rather about getting our country back on the right track?

Is it within the realm of possibility he believes everyone from the grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan to the president of Greenpeace can benefit from the Dean presidency?

Sure, every once in a while, he slips up with his wording and allows for some inferences that are contrary to his true meaning.

I'd rather have a president who occasionally says things that can be misconstrued, which is different than saying things that aren't words and make no sense, and different from a president who says what the public wants to hear ,even if she or he doesn't mean it.

However, it is still acceptable to use vulgar rhetoric in a Rolling Stone interview, just don't make fun of people from the South.

No, you guys are too reasonable to vote against him for that.

IT'S ALL ABOUT FOOTBALL

"Last night, the New England Patriots won. Tonight, this New Englander won, and you've sent me on the way to the Super Bowl," Kerry said in his victory speech.

Yes, I think this is the very reason Kerry won Iowa. You see, Iowa residents have football fever. Once they found out the New England Patriots won their playoff game the previous night, they had to vote for Kerry.

Fear not great citizens of Iowa, there is a cure for football fever, and I know just the doctor for the job.

Sincerely,

Scott "The Voice of Reason" Seel.

Lack of strong candidates leads to shallow voting

PAUL RESTIVO

New Hampshire, here they come.

But who are they?

Yeah, they're the Democratic candidates for president. None of the candidates have yet obtained endorsement from the crowd that really matters – the college vote.

Here's how I think the candidates stack up:

JOSEPH LIEBERMAN

He's Jewish. That's not a bad thing, by any means. I love Jesus, too, but our melting pot filled with more people who are not Jewish will not elect one to lead the country.

And besides Joe's uncanny resemblance to an aged Charlie, as in Charlie from the Chocolate Factory, he hasn't convinced our demographic he is the best choice. The scariest factor? Stockbrokers being entrusted with my Social Security.

HOWARD DEAN

I never really liked Howie – that is until he yelled at America last week after his sickening loss.

After that silly performance, I am a little concerned about the personal wiring of the man who could become the leader of the free world.

The latest: toymakers are marketing a Howard Dean doll for the low price of $26, featuring the famous post-Iowa caucus implosion. This week, Dean settled down with an acoustic guitar in New Hampshire to reveal a "lighter side."

Imagine four years with this nut.

JOHN KERRY

Bob Dole said it best: He's tall and rich.

But, he's not attractive. That's enough to lose my vote.

JOHN EDWARDS

Bill Clinton said it best: He's young and handsome.

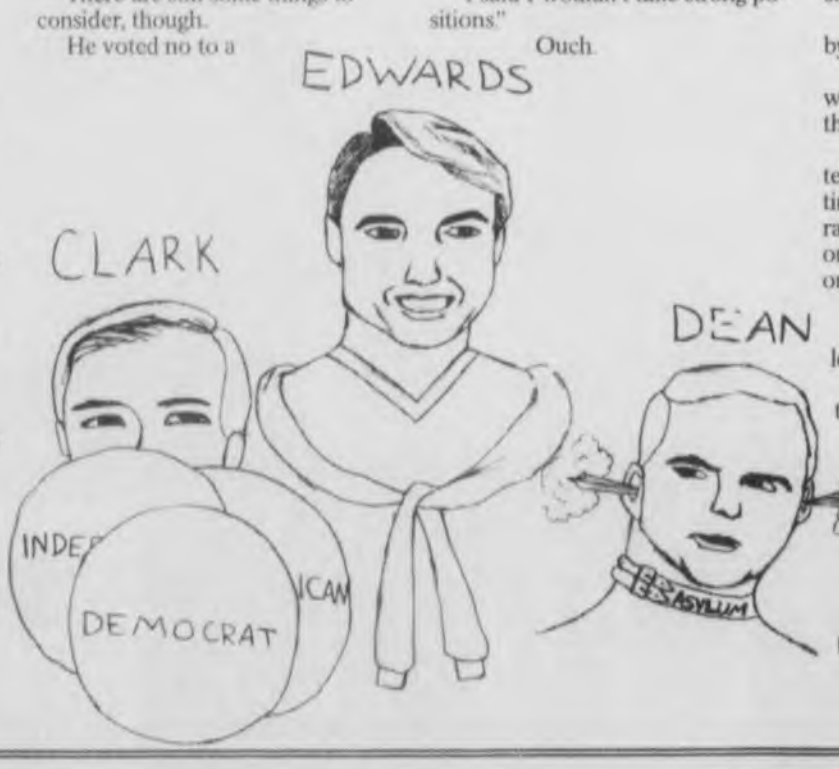
And he's rich. That's enough to get my vote.

There are still some things to consider, though.

He voted no to a partial-birth abortion ban. He voted no to stopping the use of federal funds to distribute the "morning-after" pill on school grounds. He voted no to the bipartisan tax cut plan.

But he's handsome.

WESLEY CLARK



"I am proud to be a Democrat," Clark said, when announcing his candidacy. That's great. Especially since, at the time, he was a registered independent.

Other published quotes overheard:

"I am pro-people!"

"I said I wouldn't take strong positions."

Ouch.

DENNIS KUCINICH

Iowa's carcass, as Jay Leno put it, finally leads in a poll: the least popular democratic candidate. When voters retreat to psychotic Al Sharpton for refuge, one has to wonder how low on the ladder of respectable human beings a person can go. The latest rumor on Kucinich is that he did a stint as the lead elf for Keebler.

AL SHARPTON

In his book, Sharpton makes comments on Fidel Castro: "He was brilliant. He was absolutely awesome. Fidel Castro is a great leader."

Other radical statements spoken by the reverend:

"America is beginning to reap what it has sown," in reference to the World Trade Center bombings.

"In the last decade, it is hard to tell what a Democrat stands for. It is time for Democrats to be Democrats to be Democrats. And that's one of the reasons I am embarking on this race."

Huh?

Seven candidates. Zero strong leaders.

Whom to choose? I'm going for the shallow approach – one that judges candidates only by the stores at which they shop.

John Edwards is a Banana Republic guy.

Vote Edwards.

A bill that would allow illegal immigrants to obtain Kansas driver's licenses sends a contradictory message.

The fact that these immigrants have illegally entered the United States means they should not be afforded any rights given to those who have gone through the appropriate steps to become citizens.

While immigrants are always an important part of our society and culture, there is a specific process designed to formally admit citizens into the United States, and those important steps should not be skipped by any state or local government.

Although proponents of the bill say issuing licenses would make Kansas highways and roads safer, this is no justification for exempting people from established laws.

If people who break the rules have the same opportunities as those who follow American laws, there is no motivation to abide by any set government regulations.

Seasonal Affective Disorder crosses age barriers to affect 10 million Americans

By Christopher Harrop
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Common occurrences such as difficulty waking in the morning and increased fatigue could have more to do with the weather than anything else.

People of all ages fall victim to cases of Seasonal Affective Disorder which is caused by inclement weather and less natural sunlight.

Also known as winter depression, SAD was first described by Dr. Norman Rosenthal in 1984 as a form of depression.

Charlie Drees from Pawnee Mental Health Services said between 13 and 14 million Americans have depression, including 10 million who develop the "winter blues."

"It's a seasonal pattern diagnosis. It's a sub-category of major depression. Most cases begin in the fall or winter then pass away in spring," said Chris Bernuth, psychology intern at University Counseling Services.

Changes in mood, appetite, energy levels and hormone production all are attributable to SAD. Symptoms include severe fatigue, sleep and appetite changes including carbohydrate craving, low self-esteem, irritability, and antisocial behavior.

Bernuth said increased levels of melatonin – a hormone produced based on the amount of light one receives – is one of the main reasons for the fatigue that accompanies SAD.

During the winter months, melatonin levels can remain high, making the body feel as though it needs more sleep.

This has confused some researchers because of the lower levels of serotonin – a neurotransmitter used to produce melatonin – that are common in winter.

Although anyone is susceptible to the symptoms associated with SAD, women generally compose the majority of SAD cases, Bernuth said. Each year, 60 to 90 percent of cases involve women, most of them teenagers or young adults.

"Age is a strong predictor of seasonality, with younger persons more susceptible to seasonal disorders," Bernuth said.

In a November WebMD.com article, Dan Oren, associate professor of psychiatry at Yale University School of Medicine, suggests different hormone levels – including, but not limited to, melatonin – are likely indicators of why some people develop SAD.

However, researchers have yet to rule out the possibility of genetics.

While pinpointing any single cause of SAD and diagnosing it can prove difficult, a number of steps can be taken to cope with and eventually overcome seasonal depression.

The most basic methods are well known: staying active and getting at least 30 minutes of exercise a day will boost the body's overall health and help prevent the malaise that can take hold during winter.

Other treatments are available after consulting with a health professional.

Bernuth said antidepressants often are prescribed to help patients positively alter their moods. Light therapy can help balance the effects of higher melatonin levels that cause fatigue.

Bernuth said people who suspect they have seasonal depression should seek out professional advice from a trained mental health official.

Did you know?

Overcoming seasonal depression

- Light therapy: Being exposed to indirect levels of light higher than your normal indoor setting often has antidepressant effects.
- Acupuncture: This needle-based Chinese technique aids the flow of energy through the body and has spirit-lifting qualities.
- Aromatherapy: Different scents can change a person's mood. Scented candles, bath salts and oils can be effective.
- Change your routine: Winter weather often leaves many people with a sense of helplessness and confinement. Trying new things indoors or outdoors will keep you active and feeling better.
- Exercise: Daily physical activity is one of the keys to a healthy life; that becomes even more important during the cold winter weather. A moderate level of activity for at least 30 minutes a day can minimize the physical onset of depression, as well as ward off illness.
- Massage: Another tension-releasing technique, the lowering of stress through massage can aid one's mood.

Strecker-Nelson Gallery displays art by K-State alumni

By Christopher Harrop
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Single moments in time – brief bursts of pure, unfettered emotion and thought – are at the heart of the latest gallery show to reach Manhattan.

Jane Booth's "Metaphor" show has captivated those who have visited the Strecker-Nelson Gallery on Poyntz Avenue.

Gallery co-owner Barbara Nelson said the response has been very positive.

"Many people loved it. Overwhelmingly, people have loved it," said Nelson.

"There were more than 300 people at the opening reception, and we have sold many works," she said.

Nelson said the first round of works at the gallery has sold out, and Booth described the Jan. 16 opening night reception as "a flood of people" engaged by the displays.

The outpouring of acclaim is directed toward a group of artists who have numerous K-State and local connections.

Booth is a 1978 K-State graduate. After beginning her painting career in 1996 and often working from her Wind Range Ranch in Bucyrus, Kan., Booth has made a name for herself with sprawling, abstract landscapes that are characterized by quick marks.

Booth explained her approach to the vignettes as "making swift, intuitive marks, splashes of color, without engaging logic, thought, plan ... to clear the mind out and paint intuitively, what is felt in the chest, and they become surprisingly honest."

"I loved the way the Nelsons put these four artists together. It was wonderfully eclectic."

Jane Booth
LOCAL ARTIST AND K-STATE ALUMNA

Booth's show also features oil paintings on glass done by Lisa Lala Harris of Manhattan.

Brian McCallum, who worked on his graduate thesis exhibit at K-State, has sculptural ceramics on display.

Margaret Buie, who has sold more than half of her watercolor paintings from the exhibition, is a former K-State instructor and was the longtime education and gallery coordinator for the Columbian Theatre, Museum and Art Center in Wamego.

For Booth and Harris, the "Metaphor" show is a collaboration of two artists who studied under the same master artist, Philomene Bennett, whose bright style is seen in Booth's and Harris' work.

"I love Philomene's work, and who knows where it stops and starts," Booth said.

While the bright, expressive works of Booth and Harris catch the most eyes, Booth said the exhibition is a confluence of diverse talents, each making their own mark.

"I loved the way the Nelsons put these four artists together," Booth said. "It was wonderfully eclectic."

Jeanel Drake | COLLEGIAN

Brian McCallum's ceramic "Conversing Sisters" is on display with acrylic paintings by Jane Booth at the Strecker-Nelson Gallery. McCallum worked on his graduate thesis at K-State, and Booth is a 1978 K-State graduate. The exhibit is called "Metaphor."

After the "Metaphor" exhibition, Booth's next show in the area will be in May at the Hallar Gallery in Kansas City, Mo. "Metaphor" opened Jan. 16 and closes Feb. 28.

For more information, call the gallery at 537-2099.

Tight shorts don't attract loyal fans

Competitive play, not looks, yields women's sports fans

NABIL SHAHEEN

If I were paraphrasing him, I'd tell you he said he wanted skimpier, more revealing and attention-getting uniforms.

If I were quoting him, I'd tell you he actually suggested "Tighter shorts, for example."

These are the not-so-wise words of the Féderation Internationale de Football Association President Sepp Blatter a couple of weeks ago.

With the Women's United Soccer Association folding recently and this past summer's World Cup not garnering nearly as much attention as that of 1999, he should be concerned and brainstorming new ideas.

Blatter continued blabbing, "Pretty women are playing football today. Excuse me for saying that."

"Pretty women" are playing every type of sport, everywhere. From right here in Manhattan to the farthest corner of the world, some very attractive females participate in all sorts of sports on all sorts of levels.

Did that "cat suit" Serena Williams had on at the 2002 U.S. Open make her dominating run through the tournament any more or less impressive?

I don't think so, and winning five of the last seven grand slam titles certainly attests to her greatness as an athlete.

Take our women's basketball team for example. Shorts down to their knees, jerseys fairly loose fitting, and so much tape that those ankles aren't rolling anywhere.

Yet they are still home to one of the largest fan bases in the country. No revealing attire, no skimpy uniforms.

The 8,000 of us attending each game in Bramlage Coliseum are quite fine and pleased with that because we're there to see fundamentally sound and fun basketball, not who is wearing what.

As if to prove his point, Blatter went on to point out volleyball's success with fans and a possible correlation with the fine uniforms that those women wear.

"In volleyball the women also wear other uniforms than the men," Blatter said.

Good observation.

They do.

I would certainly be lying if I told you I didn't like the tight, short shorts and form-fitting jerseys.

But that did not yield K-State volleyball's rabid fan following. It was just a good team playing good volleyball for five months.

A Big 12 Conference title, an NCAA tournament host site, Sweet 16 berth and the most wins in school history were a result of talent and hard work, not spandex on nice legs.

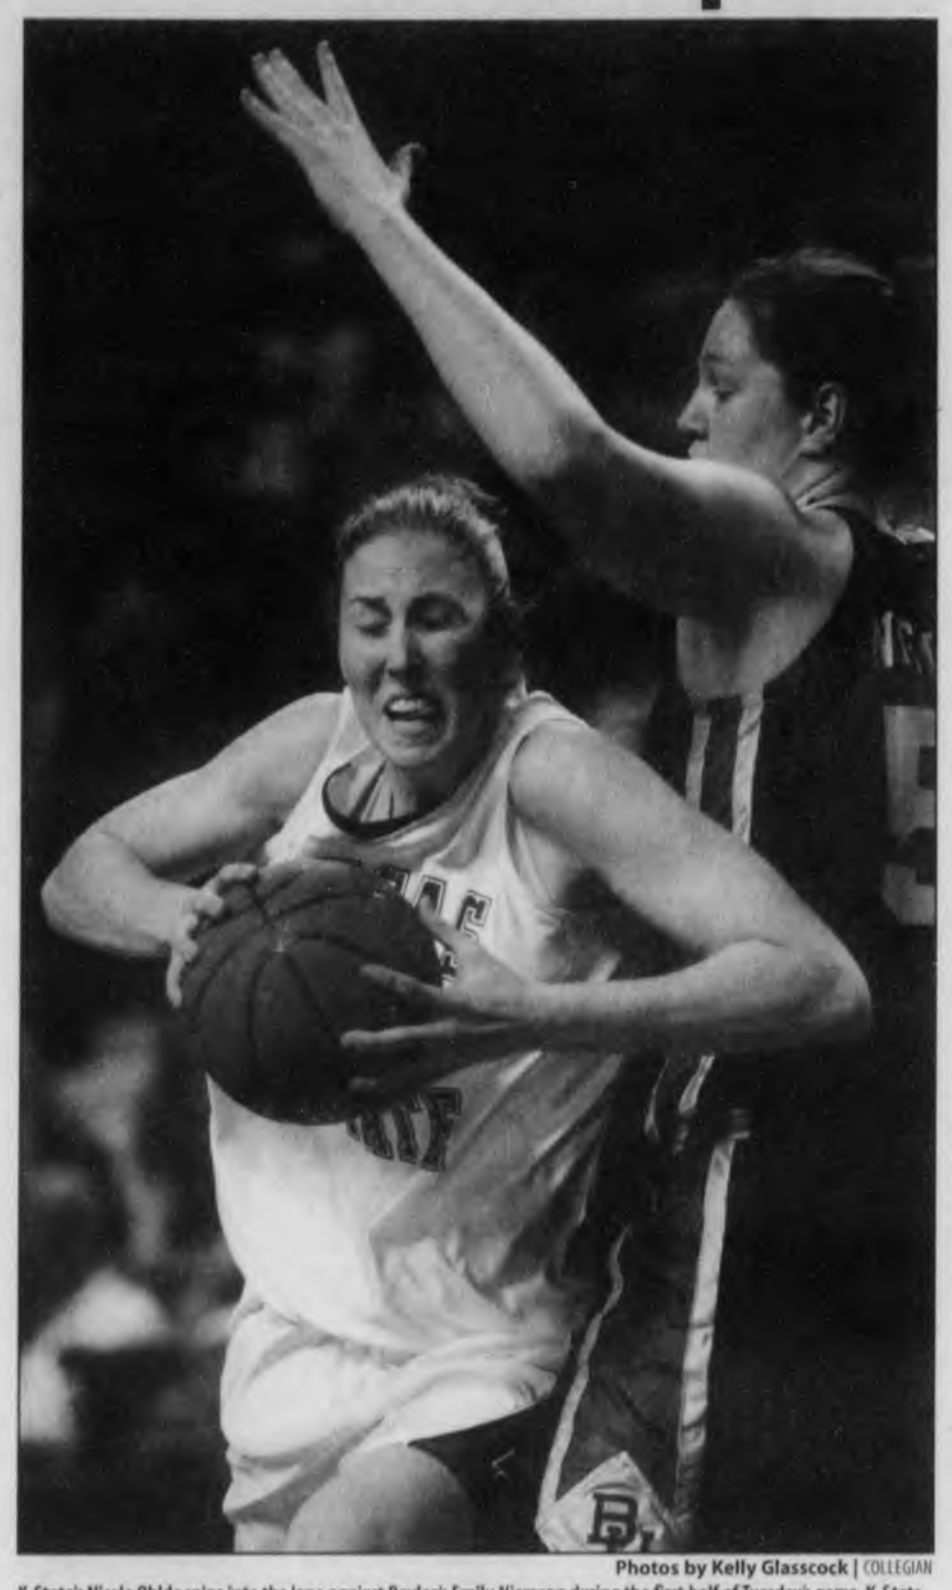
My point is, FIFA, the international soccer football governing body, is one of the highest, most regarded and respected sports federations on the planet.

For Blatter to come out and say this to the world, in my opinion, undermines what all team members on all FIFA-represented teams do.

In fact, it pretty much undermines what any female athlete who has ever laced up sneakers and ran, swam, jumped, kicked, shot, hit or played has ever worked.

Female sports have come a long, long way.

All that has been achieved is a result of hard work and dedication by hundreds of thousands of inspired women trying to be the best at what they do while trailblazing the way in hopes of making it easier for those generations who will follow.



For anyone to say they got or will get there faster through good looks and tight uniforms is preposterous.

In a game of redemption for Saturday's loss against Nebraska, the women's basketball team made its presence felt early and often on the offensive and defensive sides of the ball.

"We came out today and did everything right that we didn't do on Saturday," junior forward Kendra Wecker said.

Against one of the top post tandems in the conference, the Wildcats (14-3, 5-1) dominated the Lady Bears land rolled to a 85-65 victory.

"It (post game) was non-existent tonight other than Steffanie Blackmon," Baylor coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said. "I attribute that to their zone defense. It was outstanding."

K-State's defense kept Baylor (16-4, 4-3) to 31.6 percent shooting for the game.

Although the Cats were out-rebounded 48-40, K-State had the edge on the boards defensively, 31-24.

"Defensive rebounding is a mentality you have to bring to the floor," junior guard Megan Mahoney said. "We were pumped to get out and have another opportunity to play."

As both teams went into their respective locker rooms, K-State had a 34-30 lead.

But as the clock began ticking down to start the second half, the Wildcats kicked their game up another level.

"We all understood after half-time how important it was that if we were going to be a good basketball team we needed to be aggressive," Coach Deb Patterson said. "It's time for people to expect that night in and night out from Kansas State."

A 13-4 run began the half with senior center Nicole Ohlde and Mahoney leading the charge and scoring all 13.

With a media timeout giving both teams a breather, the crowd of 8,241 elevated to an even higher decibel level.

"Our team was focused, we wanted to get out and after it," Mahoney said.

"I wanted our crowd to get into it and put the nail in the coffin. The crowd was definitely a factor tonight."

Wecker's aggressive play crucial to Cats' victory

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All five K-State starters scored in double figures Tuesday night in the Wildcats' 85-65 victory over the Baylor Lady Bears. However, the player with the most effect on the game was junior Kendra Wecker.

In 35 minutes of play, Wecker finished with 16 points and 11 rebounds.

The double-double was the 30th of Wecker's career and the 16th of the season.

Wecker's performance Tuesday night was the focus of praise from her peers, coach and even Baylor coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson.

"I think Kendra Wecker is the player on that team," Robertson said.

"I love her play. I would vote for her anytime for player of the league. I just think she makes everyone around her better. What doesn't she do at that size? I just love her game."

Wecker was everywhere on the court. Her defense constantly frustrated Baylor players, and on a night where the Wildcats were out rebounded 48-40, her 11 rebounds were crucial in the win.

After the game, Wecker credited the win to the aggressive approach the Wildcats took to Baylor.

"We came out tonight and did everything we didn't do on Saturday," Wecker said.

"We really established ourselves early and in the second half we came out aggressive and put them in a position that they weren't able to overcome."

Wecker shot 8-of-14 from the field, had one assist, two blocks and two steals.

"What can I say? Kendra is a stud," Ohlde said.

"She did it all tonight, both on the offensive and defensive ends. She was very aggressive tonight."

Tennis | Roddick loses to Safin at Australian Open

Roddick

Safin's 2-6, 6-3, 7-5, 6-7 (0), 6-4 upset of Roddick in the quarterfinals came on the Russian's 24th birthday. Not long after Roddick smashed his racket and left the court, the crowd serenaded Safin with a rendition of "Happy Birthday."

He was the U.S. Open champion in 2000 and Australian Open runner-up in 2002, but he missed most of last year because of injury and there was some question if he would ever return to tennis' elite.

MLB | Yankees' Boone may miss season because of injury

More than two months before opening day, the New York Yankees already are stumbling.

Boone

Third baseman Aaron Boone injured his left knee playing basketball and may be out for the season, just three months after his hero-to-goat performance in the postseason.

Boone was hurt Jan. 16 and might have torn his anterior cruciate ligament. He was examined three days later by Anaheim Angels team physician Dr. Lewis Yocum, and Boone informed the Yankees of the injury that night.

The extent of the damage won't be known until swelling subsides, and Boone has not yet been examined by Yankees' doctors. If there is a complete tear, he would require reconstructive surgery that could sideline him until 2005.

NBA | Celtics coach O'Brien quits after half a season

Jim O'Brien quit as coach of the Boston Celtics on Tuesday after half a season under new boss Danny Ainge, a team source told The Associated Press.

The team said it would have a "major" announcement but did not say why. The source said on condition of anonymity that the team would announce O'Brien's departure.

The Celtics are 22-24 after reaching the playoffs the past two seasons.

O'Brien's resignation came one day after Byron Scott was fired as coach of the New Jersey Nets, the only team ahead of Boston in the Atlantic Division.

O'Brien became coach when Rick Pitino resigned in January 2001. He took the Celtics to the Eastern Conference finals in 2002 and the conference semifinals in 2003. They lost both times to New Jersey.

CFB | Texas hires former Chiefs defensive coordinator

Robinson

Robinson spent the past three seasons as defensive coordinator for the Chiefs and resigned Jan. 13 following Kansas City's 38-31 loss to Indianapolis in the AFC playoffs.

Robinson has coached 14 seasons in the NFL, including 10 as a defensive coordinator.

He will share defensive coordinator duties with Duane Akina.

Tomey will be the Longhorns' assistant head coach and work with the defensive ends.

He spent last season with the San Francisco 49ers. As a head coach with Hawaii and Arizona, he compiled a record of 158-110-7.

Louisville coach Rick Pitino might rejoin his team by this weekend after treatment Tuesday for an undisclosed condition that has caused him pain for months.

WAL-MART | Supercenter promises lower prices

current Wal-Mart building.

"They are going to start construction as soon as Wal-Mart moves out," he said. "They intend to open in 2004."

Hulett said other businesses have been considering leasing the other half of the building. However, no public announcement has been made as to which business will take the space.

Sarah Smith, senior in human ecology, has been a Wal-Mart employee for five years, and she said the move to the new store will prove beneficial for students.

"I've found it very interesting because it will bring lower prices for college kids," she said. "I think it will be a very smooth transition."

Hulett said the new store will be welcomed by the Manhattan community.

"Right now we have regular customers that travel to Junction City to shop at our Supercenter," he said. "Hopefully, we'll bring all of those people back.

"We will be very competitive with our pricing because that is what we do," he said.

Derek Christensen, owner of Kidz World on Poyntz Avenue, said he is not worried about the new Supercenter because his business isn't in competition with Wal-Mart, and he thinks it will actually bring more business for the whole area.

"Less than 5 percent of our products cross over, and we don't bring them in unless we can offer the same price as Wal-Mart," he said. "With them and Target, it will just bring more and more shoppers to Manhattan and the local retailers will catch the overflow."

"If people are coming in town to go to the Wal-Mart SuperCenter, they are not going to look for local businesses to patronize," he said. "People who have the chain store mentality are just going to want to visit other chain stores."

HALLS | Renovations main reason for increased fees

Steve Culver, director of residential life at Fort Hays State University, said FHSU's fees would rise by 4.5 percent next academic year, mostly due to inflation rates.

Burgess said while the majority of K-State's increase came from renovation costs, price inflation and anticipated operational cost changes – as with Fort Hays State – play a role in determining fee changes.

Similarly, Culver said, FHSU experienced a large rise in residence hall fees to accommodate extensive facility renovation. However, this occurred at FHSU in the 2003-04 academic year.

In that year, 10 percent of the 13.8-percent raise was specifically earmarked for general renovation, he said.

Roberston said KU offers both two- and four-room suites as well as the traditional two-person setup with a community restroom and shower. K-State only offers two- and three-person set-ups as well as two-person suites.

In addition to suite configurations, both K-State and KU offer focused living arrangements, which allow students in similar academic areas to live together.

Burgess said even though suites will decrease the number of rooms, K-State has been responding to what students want. Belinda Hunter, occupancy coordinator for housing and dining services, said the K-State system can accommodate 3,750 students.

While Fort Hays State's rates are high in comparison to other similar state schools such as Wichita State, Culver said the fees at FHSU include all utility costs.

K-State's fees include all utilities with the exception of cable and internet access.

"The only thing they would pay extra for in the residence halls is their data connection," she said.

And, a suspected car bomb was discovered near coalition and Iraqi Governing Council offices.

The United States has cited the ongoing violence in arguing against demands by Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Husseini al-Sistani for the direct election of a provisional legislature, which in turn will select a government to take power by July 1.

The Americans asked U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to send a team to determine whether an early election would be feasible.

In Paris, Annan said he believes the United Nations can play "a constructive role" in helping to break the impasse, and would send such a team to Iraq "once I am satisfied that the (coalition) will provide adequate security arrangements.

Senior forward Amy Dutmer took the starting duties for junior guard Chelsea Domenico ,who was in uniform but still recovering from head injuries sustained at Nebraska.

"My role did not change any," Dutmer said. "For the most part it was going out and doing what we had to do, Kansas State basketball."

Dutmer ended the game contributing 11 points, three steals, one rebound and one steal in 29 minutes of play.

Unaware to most people outside those in purple jerseys was the fact that Dutmer had been up all night Monday with the stomach flu.

"Without Chels, against a team of this level, I really felt comfortable with the experience factor Amy brings to the floor," Patterson said. "I really value the experience she brings. She is always ready for whatever challenge is put on her plate."

Every Wildcat available played in the game, and all five starters scored in double digits. Ohlde led the way with 26 points and Wecker added the 30th double-double of her career with 16 points and 11 rebounds.

"Pick your poison," Mulkey-Robertson said. "Plus, we played them when they are not happy right now. They just came off an embarrassing loss at Nebraska, they're not used to that."

Patterson said she would not have expected any less from her group.

"Whatever we needed today, everyone was on the same page and ready to bring it," she said. "We knew this would be a possession-by-possession game.

"It really magnified the challenge for us. We knew we had to bring nothing but our best stuff to the floor."

K-State men's 28-game losing streak lessens rivalry with KU

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team's 28th-straight home loss to Kansas did not elicit much emotion in Aggieville, other than insults among friends.

Despite the lack of emotion, it was still a good turnout for a Wednesday night.

Pete Anderson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance, said he always expects business to be better when K-State plays KU. He said the bar is staffed with more people on such nights.

He said the intrastate rivalry hasn't changed much during KU's winning streak.

"We always beat them so bad in football that they look forward to basketball season," Anderson said.

"It's just two schools who really hate each other."

1898 James Naismith started the KU basketball program.

1902 The K-State basketball program is started.

1932 K-State wins the lowest-scoring game in the series, 15-11.

1952 K-State puts up 93 points against KU, the most the Wildcats have ever scored against the Jayhawks. K-State won the game but dropped the other two games that season.

1952 KU wins its first national championship.

1988 KU wins its second national championship after beating K-State in the Sweet 16. K-State won two of the three meetings earlier that year.

1989 K-State moves its basketball games from Ahearn Field House to Bramlage Coliseum. K-State still has never defeated KU at Bramlage.

2004 K-State's losing streak to its in-state rival reaches 28 consecutive games. KU leads the overall series 166-88.

Troops might stay in Iraq through 2006

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Army's top general said Wednesday he is making plans based on the possibility the Army will be required to keep tens of thousands of soldiers in Iraq through 2006.

Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker, the Army chief of staff, told the House Armed Services Committee that, "for planning purposes," he has ordered his staff to consider how the Army would replace the force now rotating into Iraq with another force of similar size in 2005 – and again in 2006.

Stretched by commitments in Iraq, Afghanistan, South Korea and the Balkans, the Army has used emergency authority to go beyond the limit Congress set on the number of soldiers who can be in uniform, Schoomaker said.

He said the Army now is about 11,000 soldiers above the 482,400 limit and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has authorized the service to temporarily exceed the limit by as much as 30,000.

The decision about when to end the U.S. military presence in Iraq will be made by President Bush and his national security aides, in consultation with American commanders in Iraq.

Telefund officials strive to set record for funds raised

By Abbie Whited
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 25th-annual KSU Foundation Telefund begins on the Manhattan campus Monday, and once again, officials said they are ready to continue the 24-year streak of setting a record for the number of donors or dollar amount raised.

"For 24 consecutive years, we've set a record for number of donors or dollar amount raised or both," Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving, said. "Telefund is the world's largest all-volunteer telephone campaign for higher education."

The KSU Foundation organizes the event, and each college recruits volunteers to make the phone calls.

Students will call alumni from their respective college, and the money raised will go toward that college.

Dean's campaign
Democrat Howard Dean replaced his campaign manager with a longtime associate of former Vice President Al Gore. Dean also implemented cost-cutting measures as he looked ahead to a series of costly primaries and caucuses, asking staff to defer their paychecks for two weeks.

Kay keeps talking
Former weapons inspector David Kay said Wednesday, "We were almost all wrong" about Saddam Hussein's weapons programs, as Congress pressed a high-stakes struggle to pinpoint why that happened and who was responsible.

Sunday sales
Proponents of a bill to allow Sunday alcohol sales urged senators Tuesday to make the Kansas Liquor Control Act uniform and regain control of the liquor industry. Fourteen cities and one county, relying largely on a March 2003 court ruling, now permit Sunday sales despite a prohibition in the state law.

Kerry's victory
Sen. John Kerry lined up fresh endorsements from the Democratic establishment on Wednesday and launched campaign commercials in the next round of primary states as he sought to capitalize on a smashing victory in the New Hampshire primary.

The Cryptoquip is a substitution cipher in which one letter stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words and words using an apostrophe give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is by trial and error.

Students willing to pay extra fees for renovations

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In-depth
Residence halls

Residence hall fees at K-State went up 7 percent for the 2004-05 academic year. The increase was the largest jump of all Kansas Board of Regents schools.

The increase was due to a host of factors, including a rising consumer price index, a rise in the cost of utilities and other maintenance and, mostly, to cover the anticipated costs of renovations being undergone throughout the system, Bob Burgess, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said.

"I do believe I get my value out of the dorms from the services that they provide and the on-campus living arrangements," said Joseph Lyon, president of Haymaker Hall and junior in horticulture and landscape architecture.

Lyon said there is always room to make life in the residence halls better for students living there.

"In order to make improvements on the halls, it takes money," he said.

Overall, Lyon said he felt the rise in fees would not discourage students from living in the residence halls.

However, he said if fees were to rise anymore, it could become an issue.

Ben Hemphill, president of Marlatt Hall and junior in computer engineering, said he had no concerns about losing residents.

"We are always getting new people," he said. "Marlatt was full last year, and I don't see that changing."

Hemphill said he was also pleased with the services and facilities he benefits from and feels they are worth the money.

"I definitely think it's worth the money," he said. "It has to do with all the extra programs."

The fees, Hemphill said, had not been raised for a long time until recently when K-State began to undertake several improvements to the facilities which necessitated the increase.

"I think it's a really, really good deal living here in the residence halls," he said. "It's a really good value."

Rebecca Larson, resident of Boyd Hall and sophomore in management, said she thinks the residence halls are a good value.

Larson said living in the residence halls was not without its downsides, but ultimately she felt it was worth it.

"It is very expensive compared to living off campus," she said. "But I think the renovations are good and encourage people to live in the dorms who wouldn't otherwise."

Tara Thacker, resident of Moore Hall and sophomore in elementary education and theatre, said she felt otherwise.

"You can live off campus much cheaper year round," she said. "I'm moving out next year because it's just too expensive."

She said even though the room she was currently in was recently renovated, she didn't feel it was worth the extra money.

"I really don't think it is worth that much," Thacker said.

Thacker said the price of living in residence halls played a role in her decision to move off campus next year.

Student Body President John O'Hara said the overall rise in all types of fees at the university is alarming.

"It's unfortunate that we're seeing an increase," he said. "However, the Association of Residence Halls has had significant input in the process."

He said that on the whole, students are being hurt but that he respects the decision of the association to raise fees.

"I very much respect what the Association of Residence Halls has done and is continuing to try and do in respect to improving life in the residence halls," he said.

4 cars involved in similar accidents at same location

2 motorists taken to Mercy Health Center

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four vehicles were involved in two related accidents Tuesday afternoon.

Around 4:30 p.m., Steven Mitchell, 16, 819 Gillespie Drive, was driving westbound on Fort Riley Boulevard in a 1988 Mazda pick-up truck. Mitchell went left across eastbound lanes to Davis Drive when the truck was struck on the side by a 2000 Plymouth Breeze driven by Brett Schmidt, 23.

While Riley County Police Department officers were handling this accident, Heather Platte, 25, Fort Riley, was driving a 2003 Kia eastbound by the accident.

The car stopped for traffic and was rear ended by a 2003 Subaru Outback driven by Joshua Aaron, 27.

LEAVING OUR MARK... ONE EVENT AT A TIME

TO THE POINT

FCC's allowance of the F-bomb distasteful

The Federal Communications Commission decision to allow the most vulgar of F-words to be spoken on television and radio is brash and inappropriate.

The values of the general public deem the use of such language on mainstream news media unacceptable.

Although the standards of our society evolve through time, it is not yet accepting of such vulgar language.

Fifty years ago, words such as "pregnant" were considered obscene until our society changed to be more accepting.

Our society still is offended by the F-word and the other six deemed inadmissable by the FCC, as evidenced by most mainstream media's refusal to use other obscene language for fear of alienating viewers and listeners.

The F-word has no place in mainstream news media because most of society still considers it offensive.

A continued ban on such language would not infringe on free speech, but merely place regulations on a limited broadcast spectrum.

Until our society changes its standards to be less offended by this word, the FCC should continue to regulate language viewers consider vulgar and obscene.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Creationism quandary

Missouri legislators shouldn't force creation theory in schools via bill

Illustrations by Julia Koller | COLLEGIAN

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

"Who is more Taliban-like, those who would prohibit the discussion of different theories or those who would permit it?"

This question, recently asked in the letters section of the Kansas City Star, concerns Missouri House Bill 911, which would set a new standard for state science teachers requiring them to teach students the theory of intelligent design (aka creationism) in addition to evolution.

Kansas and Missouri have had their problems over the years, but Missouri needs help from Kansas.

This is not an intervention, necessarily, but rather a friendly reminder for our neighbors to the east – private beliefs and public education don't mix.

In August 1999, the Kansas Board of Education decided to de-standardize the theory of evolution for state tests. That singular action quickly went sour when Kansas became the intellectual laughingstock of the globe – we made West Virginia look like Wellesley.

Of course, Kansas standards never directly dictated science teachers to instruct students in creation science; the state of Missouri, however, is faced with the prospect of reprimanding educators who disobey the ruling.

House Bill 911 has already done substantial damage. The mere fact that Missouri legislators had the audacity to introduce a bill that would radically revise life science standards has brought the public eye of negativity toward the Show-Me State.

The state of Kansas only recently shed the cloak of infamy that came when the Board of Education decided mixing public education and private belief was a prudent policy move.

Imagine how long Missouri's reputation will remain tarnished should the state force science teachers to adhere to this particular standard.

Put aside the fact that intelligent design theory's validity is contested by scientific fact, if you can.

Constricting educators who otherwise perform well is the last thing good education policy should do. In an April 2001 work, Cato Institute scholar Sheldon Richman detailed the modern standards movement back to President Ronald Reagan's first administration.

Looking at the current Republican party today, it seems they too are supporting the new standards and accountability programs that have done little more than label hundreds of schools as failing due to an unattained (and arbitrary) benchmark.

President George W. Bush and fellow GOP members walk in Reagan's shoes, increasing federal oversight of education while waving a banner of limited government to appease traditional conservative voters.

At the same time, many Americans do not grasp the legal doctrines set forth in the First Amendment of the Constitution.

While so many supporters of instituting religion and private beliefs into public schools claim freedom of speech to characterize their opponents as "Taliban-like," they overlook the other components of the amendment.

The freedom of religion so often touted by supporters of pervasive new standards is beset by another doctrine, stating that laws shall not be made that respect an establishment of religion.

For this reason, the mandatory teaching of creationist theory is just as invalid as mandatory prayer.

This is not to say creationism has no place in school. As evidenced by the proponents of Missouri House Bill 911, a significant number of people accept this theory.

Recognizing that fact without endorsing the theory not only would satisfy the theory's proponents but also provide a broader vision of belief to students who may otherwise be left to formulate their own ideas without the benefit of educated discussion.

The real issue boils down to who is more harmful to the future of education: teachers who have performed admirably for years or bureaucrats who want to force their personal beliefs on public schools?

Trip to bowl game produces memories

GRANT REICHERT

I don't wish to rub it in the collective face of my audience, but I went to the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., and you didn't.

Unless of course you did. In which case … well, this is awkward.

But don't worry, even if you didn't get to go. I will use my magical writing abilities to bring you a first-hand, technicolor account so vivid, so vibrant, that you'll swear you're reading a thesaurus.

Not only that, but my gripping desert descriptions may cause you to have flashbacks to that time you excitedly vacationed at the Grand Canyon only to realize in retrospect that you just spent three days marveling at a hole, and the donkey you rode on the trail wasn't actually coin-operated.

My family and I started off for Tempe some time before the Fiesta Bowl started. We took two vehicles because my dad, as a Kansas farmer continually battered by drought, hail and high wind, will take any chance he can get to kick the environment in the groin.

That, and jamming me and my four brothers into any one vehicle is likely to start World Wars III through VII.

Journeying through the lonely, desolate countryside between here and Tempe is enough to try the sanity of even the most Stalwart of minds. And, due to a restraining order, "stalwart" isn't allowed within 50 feet of my mind, so I was in trouble.

I began having visions. Each one furthered me spiritually and was sponsored by Tostitos. I realize now that I am just another dip in the great salsa bowl of life.

But sooner than you could say "What is taking so long?" we were in sunny Tempe, where even the hobos dine on oranges. And although I am a fair-weather fan, luckily the weather was a very fair 60-something, so I began preparing for game time.

I attended the pep rally which featured the one and only (thank God) K-State marching band, as well as a host of speakers whose speeches may not have been the best, but at least they were extremely long.

Each speaker relived the Wildcat season, game by game. I swear, the score of the OU game will be forever burned into my brain. Thirty-five to seven.

After that, game time.

I went in, hair dyed purple and brandishing my "Free Roberson and Mumia" sign, because word was out, although later disproved, that Ell Roberson might be Spanish for "the rapist."

I found my seat in the student section, surprisingly not, as is usually my luck, located between two obese twins with violent behavioral problems.

I then began screaming in my piercing, nasal voice – that's right, I'm the complete star-studded package.

Like a true K-State fan, I cheered down to the wire, and only after I was sure we'd lost did I rip off my purple shirt and squirt "OSU" across my chest in ketchup.

And then, tail tucked firmly between legs, it was time for another trek across the great American desert.

Oh well, just remember the K-State football motto: "Yeah, but we used to suck even worse!"

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

If it weren't for his divine humility, I honestly think John Paul II would have been spinning on his beanie showing those Polish break-dancers how to really get down.

Jacko is not wacko.

Paul Restivo, sorry, I don't think the Jews are so much into the lo-e for Jesus thing.

Yeah, I sure hope I don't get mugged in the K-State Student Union parking lot, since half of the parking lot lights aren't on and it's 10 o'clock at night.

The Collegian will never learn; the KSU waterski team is the best club sport on campus.

Here's my comment about abortion — you reap what you sow.

Rock-chalk-chicken-hawk, screw KU.

I'm kinda pissed off that Nasrina Williams has ruined the Fourum.

Make the Fourum bigger.

I'd have expected more than perpetuating trite anti-Semitic stereotypes in a political review from the former editor in chief of the Collegian.

How do you turn soup into gold? Add 24 carrots.

Since when did Tampax start making boat products?

Do the folks at Bramlage and with the Sonic group think K-State basketball fans are morons? Lose the video screen shoot-out at halftime.

Congress should take action against obesity

By Vijay Ramanavarapu
THE LANTERN (OHIO STATE U.)

COLUMBUS, Ohio – It's a good time to be a cardiologist.

Sure, insurance companies are driving doctors out of business with outrageous medical malpractice insurance premiums, but at least there will never be a shortage of patients. In a country where we strive to be No. 1, we can be proud that, once again, we're the fattest nation in the world.

Obesity is a growing concern and has the potential to cripple America.

A recent study done by the Centers for Disease Control estimates obesity-related medical costs were more than $75 billion in 2003.

Taxpayers pay a little more than half the bill – $39 billion – which is larger than the entire budget for the Department of Homeland Security.

Expenses are expected only to rise, and there are other economic factors, such as time off for medical appointments, that are not included in this study.

A British lawmaker suggested the idea of a "fat tax" last year in England. The idea generated heated debates, and after a while, the idea flamed out.

In a time, however, where obesity has become a national epidemic in the United States, the idea actually seems very reasonable as an aid to combat the problem.

This is obviously a sensitive issue for many Americans, and even the most levelheaded people will let their feelings interfere with rationality.

If we, the taxpayers, have to pay for medical bills for health issues that can be prevented, why shouldn't we be compensated?

The fair solution would be to tax people who are obese, with the exception of those who suffer from hypothyroidism.

They would pay a fee because they're a burden on taxpayers.

While taxing only obese people would be the fairest thing possible, it'll be extremely inefficient and difficult to track obese people and tax them.

We should start taxing extremely unhealthy food because it will help our country in the long run.

It's not unfair to tax unhealthy food for the same reason it's alright to have taxes on cigarettes, alcohol and gas-guzzling cars.

All of these products financially hurt society, so the people who continue to buy these products have to pay an extra cost to ease the burden.

People will be more inclined to reduce their daily intake of junk food, which will make a huge effect on their overall well-being.

Obesity has grown to epidemic proportions, but we've tried to ignore the issue because of its sensitive nature.

If we fail to toughen our stance and don't tackle this problem with an aggressive solution, it will slowly incapacitate our country.

Choosing child's sex raises tough ethical questions

The Lariat (Baylor U.) Editorial

WACO, Texas - For many couples, having a child no longer means the surprise of finding out the baby's sex in the delivery room.

The practice of determining a child's sex during pregnancy has become popular among expectant parents, but what about choosing the sex of your child before he or she is even conceived?

Scientific technology now has made it possible to place the choice of a child's sex in the parents' hands, through several fertilization processes similar to in vitro fertilization and artificial insemination.

The brave new world of baby making has arrived, and many American parents are jumping on the bandwagon to "balance" their families, a Jan. 26 Newsweek article reports.

The Genetics and IVF Institute in Fairfax, Va., has signed 1,300 couples to its MicroSort "family balancing" clinical trial for families who already have at least one child, but wish to "control their family mix," the magazine reports. One doctor said he's performed 100 sex selection procedures and has more families knocking at his clinic's doors.

One popular and almost 100 percent effective treatment called PGD involves mixing sperm and eggs in a lab dish, creating embryos outside of the womb, testing them for gender, then transferring them into a patient's uterus.

Although in vitro fertilization, a similar process, has been available to parents who either can't conceive or who have a history of conceiving unhealthy children, several clinics are now offering the process to families who just want to pay the $18,000 fee of choosing a boy or a girl.

The ability to choose a child's sex raises ethical questions about whether this technology is crossing a delicate line in human reproduction.

By choosing their child's sex, are parents playing God?

Or is it simply part of an individual's right to choose, just as many believe abortion is a woman's right to choose?

Letters to the editor

Safe sex education, not laws, needed

Editor,

Fourteen-year-old Mary does, indeed, have a problem. However, let us examine the situation as you would idealize it.

She knows if she goes to her family – who have probably never even discussed birth control with her – and tells them she is pregnant, then they will be outraged. She also realizes they will never permit her to get an abortion.

Due to the recently passed Child Custody Protection Act, she does not even have the option of traveling to a different state to receive her abortion. So if she is still determined to terminate her pregnancy, she is now left with no choice but to have a "back-alley" abortion.

But once you reach the magical age of 18, the world is abruptly yours to deal with.

Having abandoned the safe and sterile world of medical doctors and sanitary procedures, she now enters the world of coat hangers and untrained practitioners. Perhaps the illegal abortion will be performed successfully. Perhaps Mary will become scarred for life from the procedure.

Perhaps both Mary and the child will be killed. Or, perhaps, the abortion will be botched; the child will not die and will instead be blessed with life and horrific birth defects.

Regardless of the outcome, she will not be nearly as safe as she would be at a clinic, nor will she be able to receive any of the counseling offered at an abortion clinic – counseling that often covers alternatives to abortion. Chances are the "back-alley" practitioner is not going to ask her, "Have you considered adoption?"

And so the Child Custody Protection Act ushers in a new age of safety and humanity for all.

A new volley of totally unenforceable laws violating the right to privacy and sending the message that it is quite OK to have sex, because your parents will deal with the consequences. But, once you reach that magical age of 18, the world is abruptly yours to deal with.

Instead of passing more laws to make us safe, why don't we encourage schools and parents to teach today's youth about safe sex, so we can drive down our teenage pregnancy rates, which rival those of many Third World countries.

Simply passing a law about something isn't going to stop it from happening.

It will only add the fact that she is a criminal to Mary's already considerably loaded conscience.

Kansas' beef supply safe despite mad cow scare

Editor,

While I make no contentions that bison is not a healthy product, the attack upon beef is unfair. The letter raises unjustified fears in consumers by leaving out necessary details and presenting arguments against beef consumption that are unfounded in science.

The writer guarantees bison from the reserve to be free of bovine spongiform encephalitis (BSE). While I tend to agree this is likely true, this guarantee insinuates that bison cannot get the disease. However, according to the United Kingdom's Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, a 6-to-7-year-old bison was confirmed to have a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy (TSE). TSEs are the equivalent of BSE in other species.

It also suggests the Kansas beef supply could contain BSE. This is highly unlikely. First of all, unlike suggested in a later paragraph, the use of cattle byproducts (the primary cause of BSE spread) in feed supplements fed to cattle has been banned in the United States since 1997.

In addition, all major beef processing plants in Kansas limit animal age at 30 months. This guarantees they were born after the ban took effect and never consumed contaminated feed.

It is also extremely rare, if not impossible, for an animal younger than 48 to 60 months to develop BSE. Given these facts, the Kansas beef supply is safe from BSE.

The writer also attacks the use of hormone growth promotants (HGPs). Extensive research has concluded the use of HGPs provides no risk to humans. Their use is controlled by the Food and Drug Administration (unlike many human supplements commonly available).

A literature review by the Food Research Institute at the University of Wisconsin published in 2000 found of the eight significant scientific reviews of

What you eat is your choice, but I ask you not to be influenced by irrational arguments without fully investigating them for yourselves.

HGPs in the previous five years, six of them concluded HGPs posed no risk to human health and the other two admitted there was no evidence of any actual damage at the minute residual levels found in beef products.

The use of antibiotics is also attacked. Sure, most cattle producers use them, but not as the letter suggests.

Cattle are not pumped full of antibiotics simply to keep them alive. Due to their high cost, antibiotics are used as sparingly as possible and never within the mandatory withdrawal period prior to slaughter.

The quality of the cattle's diet is also quite good.

The use of animal proteins is limited both by government restrictions and by many producers' preference to use protein derived from soybean meal or other plant products.

The pesticides used in the grain supply are at very low levels, which are safe even if consumed directly by humans. The term "hot rations" simply means that the ration is high in energy.

What you eat is your choice, but I ask you not to be influenced by irrational arguments without fully investigating them for yourselves.

A large consumer of beef products is the beef producer himself, and I guarantee he would not put profit over the safety of his family.

Columnists should check facts before writing

Editor,

I am amazed at the amount of misinformation your contributors manage to produce – and the Collegian to distribute.

In Monday's Collegian, Jesse Loewen's "Reforms needed . . . tax rates" grossly misrepresents current tax rates. He claims that a homeowner with an income of $45,000 pays roughly one third of the income in federal income tax, or $15,000. But all he, or anyone else, needs to do is look at the tax tables to find that, if single, his taxpayer's nominal tax rate would in fact be 25 percent, and, if married, only 15 percent, not one third.

When we include the minimal exemption and deduction, his payment if single would, in fact, be roughly $6,000, and if married with no children, it would be less than $3,700.

Married with tax credit for two minor children, he would pay about $850 – which is 2 percent, not 33 percent.

I am not sure where Mr. Loewen got his numbers. He just repeated something he had heard, or he just made them up, I guess.

I hope before leaving K-State with a mechanical engineering degree, he will have learned about checking his numbers first.

On the same page above Mr. Loewen's column is another one, by Kathryn Hollingsworth concerning abortion. It too presents a case, this one about "Mary." And it, too, is imaginary (admittedly).

I wish its author would familiarize herself with cases from the real world before making up stories. I also wish Collegian editors would do some fact-checking.

Cats come close, but fall to Jayhawks for 28th-straight game against intrastate rival

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the 28th straight game, No. 15 Kansas (13-3, 5-0) defeated K-State (9-7, 1-4) at Bramlage Coliseum, 78-70, on Wednesday.

The K-State men's team came close for the second straight game against Kansas but was unable to overcome free-throw problems and a stagnant offensive performance to pull off the win.

"We had guy after guy miss when we needed to make some free throws," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

The Wildcats never got any kind of offensive rhythm, as the Jayhawks' defense allowed few inside passes into the Wildcats post players.

"We always want to go inside, but we played really tentative and outside the arc," Wooldridge said.

Despite being behind the entire game, K-State made its presence known in the first half with second-chance points and putting Kansas into foul trouble. The Wildcats scored 11 of their 29 first-half points on second chance baskets and caused 10 Kansas team fouls. The Wildcats also outrebounded the Jayhawks 20-19.

Junior forward Jeremiah Massey, led K-State in the first half with seven points on 3-for-3 shooting and added four rebounds.

"I just tried to play hard and get the job done," Massey said.

"Massey played better and had a sound game," Wooldridge said.

K-State went into the locker room down 40-29 at the half.

"You can't fall back behind that much and then to try and play catch-up the whole game," senior guard Tim Ellis said.

After trading baskets early in the second half, the Jayhawks opened the lead even further with a 10-0 run to push the score to 56-37.

"KU played really well, and we were behind the pace," Wooldridge said.

But just as the Jayhawks looked to have the game under control, K-State hit the

CBB | Majerus hospitalized, will resign after season

Utah basketball coach Rick Majerus was hospitalized with heart problems and will resign after the season, the school announced Wednesday.

Majerus

Majerus, 55, felt chest pains Tuesday night and contacted a cardiologist in Santa Barbara, Calif., where he went for treatment. "He's stepping down, definitely, at the end of the season," Utah spokesman Mike Lageschulte told The Associated Press. "If he's doing better and can come back, he will, but right now he definitely won't coach beyond this year."

Assistant coach Kerry Rupp will take over coaching duties in the interim for Utah (15-5), which lost its last two games.

Majerus led the team to the 1998 NCAA championship game, where it lost to Kentucky.

NFL | NFL Hall of Famer Crazy Legs Hirsch dies

Elroy "Crazy Legs" Hirsch, an NFL Hall of Famer and later athletic director at the University of Wisconsin, died early Wednesday. He was 80.

He earned his nickname for his running style as a halfback and receiver for the NFL's Los Angeles Rams in the NFL from 1949-57. Before that, he played for the Chicago Rockets of the All-America Football Conference.

Hirsch became a key part of the Rams' revolutionary "three-end" offense in 1949. His best season was 1951, when he led the NFL with 66 catches, 1,495 yards receiving and 17 touchdowns.

NFL | Chiefs hire Pagac as linebackers coach

The Kansas City Chiefs said Wednesday they have hired Fred Pagac as linebackers coach.

Pagac spent the past three seasons coaching linebackers for the Oakland Raiders. For 19 years, Pagac was an assistant coach at Ohio State, his alma mater.

He was the Buckeyes' defensive coordinator from 1996-99. In 1998, Ohio State led the nation in rushing defense and ranked No. 2 in pass defense.

Pagac will be working under Gunther Cunningham, the former head coach of the Chiefs who returned this month as defensive coordinator.

NBA | LeBron won't risk ankle for dunk contest

LeBron James says he won't compete in the Slam Dunk contest during the NBA's All-Star weekend next month because of the ankle injury that has sidelined him for three games.

James

The Cleveland rookie was picked Tuesday to play in the Rookie Challenge, an event the league moved from Saturday to Friday night in prime time.

James and his good friend, Denver's Carmelo Anthony, will be teammates against a squad of the league's second-year players, featuring Houston center Yao Ming and Cavaliers' forward Carlos Boozer.

CFB | Clarett declines to take part in OSU workouts

Suspended Ohio State tailback Maurice Clarett won't take part in offseason workouts, even though he's been cleared by the school.

Clarett

"I think he felt he didn't want to work out until he got reinstated by the NCAA," Ohio State athletic director Andy Geiger said Wednesday.

Despite his suspension, the school permitted Clarett to participate in individual winter conditioning workouts that started last week.

Clarett, who helped Ohio State win the 2002 national title as a freshman, has been suspended since September for accepting improper benefits from a family friend and then lying about it to investigators.

Junior forward leads Wildcats in scoring with 21 in loss to KU

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two weeks ago Jeremiah Massey walked off the floor of Allen Fieldhouse disappointed in his play and the game's losing result.

Wednesday – although the Wildcats fell again to the Kansas Jayhawks 78-70 – Massey's play was nothing to hang his head about.

Coming off the bench, the 6-foot-7 junior paced K-State with 21 points and 12 rebounds, as he returned to the form most fans had grown accustomed to seeing early in the season.

In a contest that saw the Wildcats refuse to give up in front of the home crowd, Massey symbolized the team's heart with his aggressive play from start to finish.

Due in large part to Massey's efforts, K-State withstood several Kansas runs by winning the rebounding battle, 45-33.

Massey dominated the offensive boards for the Wildcats against a Jayhawk frontcourt led by All-America candidate, Wayne Simien.

Massey grabbed eight of his 12 rebounds off the offensive glass, contributing to the Wildcats' 25 second-chance points and 22 offensive rebounds.

"Jeremiah came out with a lot of energy tonight," senior guard Jarrett Hart said. "He had a lot of energy plays where he got an offensive rebound and put it up strong."

WES MARFIELD

Say it ain't so, Mo.

After 12 solid major league seasons, rotund New York Mets first baseman Mo Vaughn announced his retirement Monday.

Not since Lou Gehrig has the Big Apple seen one of its beloved first basemen go out with such grace and dignity.

"My career is over," Vaughn said at a baseball banquet earlier this week. "I have an injury no doctor can fix, but I have no regrets."

Vaughn, in his prime, was one of the most lovable players to set foot on the diamond. His career totals may not get him into Cooperstown, but he'll always hold a special place in my heart.

Standing 6-feet-1 inch tall and weighing in at close to three bills, Vaughn redefined the way first base was played. His stance, which resembled a boxer covering his face, led him to 328 career homeruns.

His numbers spoke for themselves, but Mo never shied away from letting the world know what was on his mind. That, friends, is how a man composes himself.

But the things I'll miss the most about Vaughn are the memories.

Once toys, these little guys became a hot commodity, and it was considered insane to remove them from their collectible packaging and deface their value.

I hopped on the bandwagon faster than party-hopper Nicole Richie could say "Kobe Bryant" and snatched up one of these new collectibles.

If you haven't guessed it by now, it was a Mo Vaughn statue. And it was the only one I ever bought.

See, these overpriced figurines didn't hold a candle to my baseball card collection, and I quickly gave up on the fad. But I held on to the Vaughn like it was priceless.

During a time in my life when baseball took a backseat to being a kid, I made a foolish mistake. By the time Fourth of July rolled around, I was feverishly searching to find something to blow up after I ran out of coffee cans and McDonald's toys.

It was time for Mo to go.

Seven packages of Black Cats and a few M-60's later, Mo no longer had any of his extremities. I felt a little remorse in blowing up one of my favorite players, but that gave way to bigger and better pyrotechnics.

Today, in a landfill not far from here, lies a puddle of plastic where Mo Vaughn once stared down opposing Starting Lineup pitchers.

It truly was a sight to see.

Once my passion for the game was rekindled, I continued to follow Mo, watching him suffer through injuries that would eventually force him into Monday's announcement. And aside from the firecracker incident, I respected him more than most money-grubbing players.

After a run-in with Red Sox brass in the 1998 season, Vaughn knew his time in Beantown was limited. He may have signed a lucrative contract with the Angels after belting out 39 homers in the Sox's wild-card run in the 1998 season, but his heart was always with Boston fans.

But Mo was never the same after that, as injuries plagued his remaining days after a trade to the Mets in the 2001 season.

So here's to Mo Vaughn. Though injuries plagued what seemed to be a Hall-of-Fame career, you inspired fans across the nation with your passion for the game.

And in writing a retrospect on one of my favorite players, I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the earth.

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Liquor bottles and beer bottles provide the perfect opportunity for any college student to add some flare to an otherwise drab residence hall room, apartment or house.

Plus, the bottle comes free with the alcohol.

"The room was pretty white," L.J. Dickens, junior in civil engineering, said about why he has a bottle collection. "They add a little color."

Dickens has had his liquor bottle collection since his freshman year. His original goal was to fill the ledge above the window in his residence hall room with bottles.

"Some other people have done it," said Jesse Manning, senior in political science and history and Dickens' roommate, "and that's kind of where the idea came from."

Dickens and Manning have 42 bottles resting on the ledge above the window in their room.

This year, they have contributed an additional four bottles to their collection.

In addition to having a liquor bottle collection, Dickens and Manning also have a bottle cap collection.

"We started collecting bottle caps last year," Manning said. "We have a table we were going to glue them on and make a design with."

The table design fell through, but they still have the caps and find them randomly around their room.

Dickens has his own theory as to why people, especially college students, collect liquor bottles.

"It's kind of an ice breaker," he said. "People come in (and say), 'Oh, nice collection. Oh, that's my favorite kind of drink right there.' It's kind of a conversation starter for people you may not know."

The roommates said they started with malt beverages and the traditional "girly drinks," then they moved on to beer and finally into hard liquors – whiskey, rum and vodka.

"We're getting progressively harder," Manning said.

The bottles are placed on the ledge "in the order I drink them," Dickens said.

Dickens and Manning only add bottles they drink to their collection. People have tried to add other bottles, and even cans, to their collection as well, but they have never been successful.

Another student who boasts a large liquor bottle collection is Brett Hamilton, sophomore in electronic journalism. He and his roommates have a house littered with beer paraphernalia.

There are various beer labels stuck on a lamp shade, a Corona Extra bath towel hanging on the living room wall and shot glasses on top of the entertainment center.

Hamilton and his roommates started their bottle collection about a year ago.

The 12 to 14 hard liquor bottles that make up their collection are displayed on top of the kitchen cabinets. Each bottle has been altered, so it glows under a black light.

The bottles themselves are still intact, but the men have added water mixed with yellow highlighter ink to make them glow when a black light is placed behind them.

"It's cheap decoration," Hamilton said. "It looks pretty cool – it's pretty impressive, and honestly, it's better than buying something."

The most impressive item in their house, however, is the coffee table covered with 1,200 bottle caps. It took Hamilton and his roommates six to eight months to collect enough caps to fill the table. The caps form a design on the table featuring a Powercat in the middle.

When it comes time to decide what to do with the table and the liquor bottle collection after they graduate, Hamilton and his roommate, Paul Dilione, sophomore in open-option, are unsure of where the items will end up.

"If I could sell it for a lot of money, that would be awesome," Hamilton said.

"I saw it at a frat party. Some guys had some on their door, and we decided it would be pretty cool to put it on a table," Dilione said.

Hamilton explained why the men had an extensive liquor paraphernalia collection.

"Yes, we have too much free time on our hands," he said. "It's either this or studying."

Dreamworks representatives have said "Shrek 3" will involve "the big green guy pulling up a chair at King Arthur's round table," according to eonline.com.

"Shrek" features the voice talents of Mike Myers, Cameron Diaz and Eddie Murphy. The original movie opened during the summer of 2000.

Proposal for discount movie theater in Westloop falls through

By Lauren Bishop and Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan resident Avery Murdie, owner of Westloop 6 Cinemas, which was to open late last year, recently announced his plans to drop the project.

Murdie and his business partner had taken on the project in April, with the theaters set to open in early September. No staff had been officially hired.

However, with no theaters running, there was speculation as to why the cinemas were never opened.

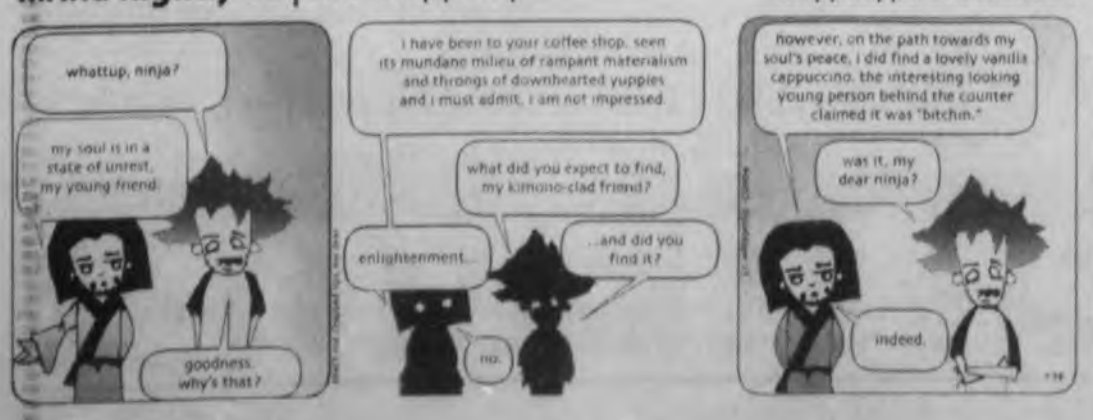
Murdie said grants and loans were approved and a lease on the property was ready to go, but his partner backed out at the last minute and took on better opportunities, leaving many loose ends. Much of the equipment for the theater already had been selected, and the old seats had been removed from all auditoriums to prepare for new ones.

Murdie said he put months of work into the project, and the departure of his partner was a hard blow.

For Murdie, it was too much money and time to open the theaters without the aid of his partner.

The establishment originally was to open as a discount theater. It was to acquire first-run films after they left Seth Childs Cinemas, the only multiplex in town.

Murdie's business partner was unavailable for comment.



Columbus, Ga.-based Carmike Cinemas closed Westloop 6 in June 2000 after filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy. Carmike owns and operates Seth Child Cinemas.

New coffee shop debuts in Durland Hall

By Angela Rickard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Temperatures Wednesday morning topped out at 5 degrees, and Steven Tieszen needed a jolt of java to warm and wake him before his first class.

But instead of walking to Dara's Fast Lane for his usual cup of coffee, the junior in mechanical engineering stayed in Durland Hall and visited Campus Grounds Espresso, a new Seattle-style espresso and coffee bar.

"Now I don't have to go out in the cold," Tieszen said. "It's really convenient to be able to grab some coffee without leaving the building."

Jeff Smith, president of Campus Grounds Espresso and K-State alumnus, said he loves espresso and coffee, and wanted to bring the service to the campus.

As a result, Smith brought the coffee shop to another location on campus besides the K-State Student Union.

"Coffee bars are very popular on the east and west coasts," Smith said.

"I thought students would enjoy having this service within the walls of the university."

Despite a new coffee shop opening last week in the Union, Smith said the response has been good.

Union officials also said they were in support of having another coffee shop on campus.

Emily O'Connor, marketing manager for the Union, said the new coffee shop is a welcome addition to campus.

"A lot of the engineering students are tied to the area," O'Connor said. "It will be nice for them to be able to have that type of service in their building."

Campus Grounds Espresso doesn't plan to compete with other coffee shops around town, because Smith said he doesn't think he will draw other coffee shop's regular customers away from them.

"We have a completely different market than the coffee shops in Aggieville," Smith said. "We want to serve the students, faculty and staff here on campus and in the building."

Brent Aldridge, manager of Java Espresso and Bakery, said having other coffee shops in town creates a market share.

"I welcome other coffee shops to town," Aldridge said. "People will go where it's convenient, the atmosphere is friendly and the coffee is good."

FCC will allow use of F-word

By Jonathan D. Salant
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Federal Communications Commission Chairman Michael Powell said he wants a tenfold increase in the fines that can be imposed on broadcasters for indecent programming.

The current maximum levy is $27,500, which Powell said is "peanuts" for big media companies."

Powell's proposal, which needs congressional approval, comes amid continued criticism of the FCC for a ruling last October that an expletive uttered by the musician Bono on a network TV program was not indecent because it was used as an adjective rather than to describe a sex act.

Bono's comment was aired on the Golden Globes Awards show last year where Bono, the lead singer of the Irish rock group U2, said "this is really, really, f------ brilliant."

"Clearly, we're beyond the 'Ozzie and Harriet,' days but we still don't need some of this language that's out there," said Rep. Fred Upton, R-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications.

Under FCC rules and federal law, radio stations and over-the-air television channels cannot air obscene material at any time, and cannot air indecent material between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.

The FCC defines obscene material as describing sexual conduct "in a patently offensive way" and lacking "serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value."

Indecent material is not as offensive but still contains references to sex or excretions.

There are no such requirements for cable channels, which do not use the public airwaves.

Intelligence failures warrant investigation, former inspector says

By Katherine Pfleger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Former weapons inspector David Kay said Wednesday "we were almost all wrong" about Saddam Hussein's weapons programs, as Congress pressed a high-stakes struggle to pinpoint why that happened and who was responsible.

Republicans say the nation's intelligence agencies were the problem.

Democrats point to the White House, questioning possible pressure put on intelligence analysts and noting Vice President Dick Cheney's continued assertions that weapons of mass destruction existed.

Asked at a Senate Armed Services Committee hearing if an independent investigation was warranted, Kay replied that he believed an outside inquiry would give Congress and the public more confidence.

Democrats are sure to make use of that point as they call for more and broader inquiries.

Kay said he spent six months looking for the former Iraqi president's banned weapons and has concluded, based on a "sufficiently intense" effort, that they were not there. Kay said inspectors found no stockpiles – large or small.

"We were almost all wrong, and I certainly include myself here," he said.

"My view was that the best evidence I had seen was that Iraq indeed had weapons of mass destruction."

He also said he believes analysts have been asked to read too much into limited data.

And, he said, the U.S. intelligence community had become "almost addicted" to information coming from U.N. weapons inspectors during the 1990s, leaving them in trouble when those inspectors had to leave.

Since he resigned Friday as the top weapons hunter in Iraq, Kay's public statements have sparked widespread questioning in Washington about the reliability of U.S. intelligence data and the Bush administration's main justification for war: to remove an imminent threat posed by Saddam and his supposed weapons.

President Bush has vigorously defended his decision to go to war and expressed confidence in the intelligence agencies.

"There is no doubt in my mind that Saddam Hussein was a gathering threat to America and others," Bush said.

The White House on Wednesday dismissed the notion of an independent investigation into intelligence failures.

Barry Eggleston became increasingly upset with K-State's play.

Not everyone was even sure a rivalry existed.

"Is there one?" Eggleston said.

Downey is from Junction City, and although he lived close to K-State, he never wanted to attend the university.

"When I was growing up in the early '90s, no one wanted to be associated with K-State," Downey said.

Eggleston said he never thought about going to KU.

"We wouldn't take his kind anyway," Downey said.

Downey said a comparison between Manhattan and Lawrence during game day should not made because of KU basketball prestige.

"Students skip class and camp out all week to get good seats in the student section," he said. "If we wanted to go to the game tonight we could have gotten tickets right outside of the door.

"There are so many deep generations of KU basketball fans, but they just don't come out of the woodwork until basketball season."

KU has dominated the basketball rivalry for two decades, and as a result, Downey said, inferiority during football season doesn't matter.

"You learn not to expect as much, and anything beyond mediocre is good," Downey said.

Miller got his undergraduate degree in finance from K-State – something his Jayhawk friends cannot fathom.

Miller said even as an undergraduate at K-State, he was still a KU fan.

"People used to give me crap every day," Miller said.

"I used to wear my KU hat to class, and people couldn't understand it."

Playful profanity and lewd hand gestures were traded among the group.

"He's obnoxious," Crystal Roudybush, one of the K-State graduates at the table, said with a big smile.

Seth Retter, also a K-State graduate, lives in Missouri and said Tiger fans are just as difficult.

"If there's one thing KU and K-State agree on, it's that we both hate Missouri," Miller said.

ARMY | Iraq troop rotations begin in February

As a service chief, Schoomaker's role is to ensure that soldiers are trained and equipped for any mission the president requires.

Of the 105,000 troops going to Iraq this winter and spring to replace the 130,000 who have been there since the start of the war, about 80,000 are Army soldiers. The replacement force, which includes 25,000 Marines, is scheduled to spend a full year in Iraq.

Army officials have said planning for the 2005 rotation of forces into Iraq will begin in February.

Schoomaker said he was opposed to Congress passing legislation to permanently expand the size of the Army, mainly because it would be too costly.

"I'm adamant that that is not the way to go," the Army chief said.

Even while the Iraq war continues, the Pentagon is planning a new offensive in the two-year-old Afghanistan campaign to try to stop remnants of the Taliban regime and the al-Qaeda terrorist network, officials said Wednesday.

Orders have been issued to prepare equipment and supplies, though the operation will not necessarily require additional troops in the region, where about 11,000 Americans are still deployed, a defense official said on condition of anonymity.

Schoomaker said the Army is enjoying success in recruiting new soldiers.

"There are more people lining up to come in than we've ever had, and the quality of those people is higher than it's ever been, and there's no indication right now that that's not going to continue," he said.

Members of the House panel expressed surprise that Rumsfeld had agreed that the Army needed as many as 30,000 more soldiers, since he has publicly opposed a legislative move to expand the service.

Rep. Ellen O. Tauscher, D-Calif., said it sounded as if Rumsfeld was accomplishing through the use of his own executive powers the troop increase that he had resisted on Capitol Hill.

Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., the ranking Democrat on the House Armed Services Committee, said he was concerned that the requirement for large numbers of troops in Iraq and Afghanistan may break the Army.

"This does not mean we should pull back from our commitments," Skelton said.

"We can't unring the bell. We're there. We've got to win. We've got to stabilize that country," he said of Iraq. "We cannot afford that to evolve into a civil war."

Senior reflects on her tennis career

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The weather outside is cold, but the K-State women's tennis team is red hot.

The Cats will take on No. 53 Mississippi Friday afternoon in Manhattan.

Mississippi already has had three victories against Tennessee Tech., Troy State, and Tennessee-Chattanooga.

Following the meet Friday, the Cats will wake up Saturday prepared to take on Wichita State.

One philosophy WSU's coach Les Stafford has is to schedule at least four meets a year with teams from the Big 12. He said it gives the team a little more confidence for the conference meet.

As K-State has all returning players, the challenge lies ahead for WSU's four returning and three freshman players.

Senior Paulina Castillejos spends time reflecting on her past years as a Wildcat, but also realizes the potential for this season's team.

Castillejos was just 10 years old when she began learning the skills of tennis. She grew up in Puebla, Mexico, and it almost seemed like she did not find tennis, but that tennis found her.

Young Castillejos did not know anything about the game, but a club in Puebla was offering free lessons. After about a year of playing, she heard about a tournament. They didn't have enough players, so they offered her a spot.

Although defeated, she decided there was something there.

Castillejos got a new coach and began practicing a few times a week. The results were good, and 2000 brought her to the United States as one of Coach Steve Bietau's recruits.

Castillejos, 23, now spends most of her time on the court or in class. She also enjoys movies, relaxing and someday hopes to learn to scuba dive. She is majoring in computer information system and management and plans to earn her master's degree.

She said she looks up to former doubles partner, Petra Sedlmajerova.

"She really practiced hard every day. She was always focused and never sloppy. She is also one of my best friends," she said.

"I've been there longer than anyone else. I think I look at things a little more seriously, and I'm quiet and try to stay focused," she said.

"I like playing with Paulina because she competes well. She has good attitude and we understand each other. We try to get every ball and win every point," Rosenberg said.

The Cats play at 4 p.m Friday and 3 p.m. Saturday. Admission is free.

boards and converted on second-chance points to put together a 10-0 run of their own to pull within nine, 66-55.

"I thought they played well. They showed a lot of determination when the game seemed to be out of hand," Wooldridge said.

Although the crowd of 11,103 got back into the game, the chants of "Let's go Wildcats," were not enough to bolster K-State over Kansas.

The Jayhawks then worked the clock and forced K-State to foul, putting junior guard Aaron Miles at the line to ice the game for Kansas.

Even though K-State was unable to snap the streak, senior guard Jarrett Hart said he looks for his team to regroup.

"We are a competitive bunch. We're going to bounce back," Hart said.

MASSEY | Junior leads K-State in scoring, rebounding

Massey's big night marked the first time since the last Kansas game he scored in double figures.

Though Massey put up 12 points on the Jayhawks in that Jan. 14 meeting, it was far from a memorable game.

In Lawrence, Massey was out of control at times and shot just 4-for-15 from the field.

Contrast that sub-par performance with Wednesday night's 9-for-13 shooting display

Massey said he was not as poised the first time against the Jayhawks or in the next three conference games as he was in last night's game.

"In the first Big 12 games, I was just trying to do too much," Massey said.

Massey had only one turnover against the Jayhawks after averaging just more than three a game in Big 12 play.

Wooldridge said he thought a play early in the game showed Massey was set for a solid game.

"When he got in the game he made an easy pass, and that was an indication he was taking things in the right way," Wooldridge said.

Despite having one of his best games of the season, Massey was far from satisfied following the Wildcats' 28th straight defeat to their in-state rivals.

"I played all right, but it doesn't matter if you don't get the win," he said.

K-State football player arrested on assault charges

Webb allegedly involved in Aggieville fight in July 2003

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State quarterback Allen Webb, a transfer player from the University of Indiana, was arrested Wednesday and charged with assault.

Webb was arrested on a warrant stemming from his alleged involvement in a fight June 27, 2003, in an Aggieville alley, Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said.

Bail was set at $500.

"Mr. Webb allegedly struck the victim in the face," Moldrup said. "This was the same incident which involved some other (K-State) football players."

Moldrup said Webb was released after posting bond.

While there were allegedly multiple players involved in the incident, which already has led to the arrest of former K-State safety James McGill, Moldrup said he could not comment on any other warrants that have been issued or that might be issued in the future.

Sports Information Director Garry Bowman said the university would allow the judicial process to take its course, and any punitive action taken against Webb would be done within the program.

Webb, who has four years of eligibility remaining, is expected to compete for the starting job at quarterback next season with sophomore Dylan Meier and incoming freshmen Nick Patton and Allan Everidge.

Cops guided by laws, realize reality of college parties

By Leigh Ochsner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brian Olberding has opened his door for police on multiple occasions.

However, he has never received more than a warning for a noise complaint. Olberding, senior in construction science and management, said the police have never asked to search the premises but have looked around to make sure no one was holding a beverage.

"They're not going to do anything harsh if you're not a jerk," Olberding said. "They know what's going on. Normally, if you're honest with them, they'll tell you to keep it under control."

"We understand the reality of the situation – we live in a college town," said Lt. Tim Hegarty, Riley County Police Department Watch One Commander, or night shift lieutenant. "You have people 18 to 22 years old. They're going to want to have parties and have a good time."

But what exact rights do police officers have? The Collegian takes a look at three different situations and what police officers can and cannot do in each one.

AT A PARTY

Each fall, Hegarty said, the RCPD distributes fliers to inform people of laws and ordinances before a situation might get out of control.

The city of Manhattan has a disorderly house ordinance for houses with more than one alcohol or noise violation in less than a year. Violators may be fined or asked to move out, Hegarty said.

The RCPD primarily learns about parties because of noise complaints or because the area officer sees the party. They also monitor www.ksunderground.com, a Web site that posts party information.

5 Fort Riley soldiers killed in Iraq

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five Fort Riley soldiers have been killed in Iraq this week.

Three Fort Riley soldiers were killed during an explosive attack Tuesday. A fourth soldier died Thursday from injuries sustained in the same attack, and fifth soldier died in an unrelated incident, said Christie Vanover, Fort Riley deputy media relations officer.

CAPTAIN

The two soldiers who died Thursday have not been publicly identified.

An attack in Khaldiyah killed the four soldiers. According to the Associated Press, witnesses spoke of two roadside bombs in Khaldiyah, 50 miles west of Baghdad. The area is a hotspot of guerrilla activity where several attacks have taken place against U.S.-led coalition forces.

The soldiers killed were Capt. Matthew J. August, Sgt. First Class James T. Hoffman and Sgt. Travis A. Moothart, all of the 1st Engineer Battalion, 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division.

Moothart
SERGEANT

August, 28, of Rhode Island, was the commander of Company B. He joined the Army in May 1997 and has been stationed at Fort Riley since June 2002.

Hoffman, 41, was from Whitesburg, Ky., was assigned to Company B. He joined the Army in November 1984 and had been stationed at Fort Riley since November 2001.

Moothart, 23, of Brownsville, Ore., was a vehicle repairman for Headquarters and Headquarters Company. He joined the Army in April 2000 and had been stationed at Fort Riley since October 2001.

Afghan bomb kills 7 soldiers

HOW TO Find a job

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The day has come. You have to find a job.

After all, that is what the college experience is about, preparing you for life in the "real" world – the working world.

APPEARANCE

It is important to dress appropriately when investigating possible job prospects. Employers are much more likely to consider someone who walks in wearing dress slacks and a blouse or button-down shirt than someone who saunters into their store wearing ripped jeans and a body-hugging "I make boys cry" T-shirt.

DEMEANOR

Be confident and alert, but don't come off as arrogant or rude. Employers look for potential employees who are conversational and positive.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS

First impressions are always the strongest images employers receive from their employees. When entering a business, take a pen or pencil with you to show the employer you are serious. Also, wait patiently to talk with the owner or manager if he or she is busy with a customer.

Waiting patiently reveals the courteous side of the potential employee, and it will help you score brownie points. Being pushy and interrupting the boss will only make you look bad.

Finding a job is not an easy task. It takes dedication and sometimes even rejection. Just follow these tips, and you'll be earning money in no time.

Released teen admits to murder

By Jill Barton
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. – The teen whose life sentence for killing a playmate stirred national debate over Florida's treatment of juvenile criminals pleaded guilty to second-degree murder Thursday, finalizing his release after three years in prison.

Lionel Tate, who was 12 when he beat 6-year-old Tiffany Eunick to death almost five years ago, declined to speak but offered through his attorney to meet with the girl's mother.

Before the plea, the mother told the court that Tate committed a "brutal murder," but said she forgave him. Tate, wearing a tan suit and an open collar, showed little response as he listened to her.

"This was not child's play. This was not roughhousing. This was a brutal murder," Deweese Eunick-Paul said.

"I firmly believe in God, and I believe in forgiveness. I so much believe in God and for that I have forgiven you, Lionel," she said.

Eunick-Paul also said she wanted Tate, 16, to publicly acknowledge that her daughter's death was not an accident.

His attorney, Richard Rosenbaum, said Tate was remorseful for Tiffany's death and had looked at her photograph earlier Thursday.

"By entering the guilty plea, Lionel has accepted the responsibility for Tiffany's death," Rosenbaum said.

An appeals court threw out Tate's first-degree murder conviction last month, ruling he might not have understood the criminal proceedings against him four years ago.

Instead of holding another trial, prosecutors offered Tate a plea that would sentence him to the three years he has already served. He was released earlier this week and had to enter the plea to finalize the deal.

Tate had claimed he accidentally killed the girl while imitating professional wrestling moves he had seen on television. Tate, who turns 17 on Friday, now says he leaped from a staircase and accidentally landed on her chest.

Tiffany suffered a fractured skull, lacerated liver and at least 35 other injuries.

As part of the deal, Tate will be under house arrest for a year and probation for 10 years. He also must complete 1,000 hours of community service and receive regular counseling.

Circuit Judge Joel Lazarus said he was convinced that Tate understood that one violation of the agreement would send him back to prison.

"I'm sure you feel a great weight was lifted from your shoulders ... but a new and different weight has been placed upon you," Lazarus said. "For the first time in 3 years, you will have the opportunity to make your own decisions."

TO THE POINT

Jury duty valuable learning opportunity

Despite the inconvenience that might arise in one's schedule, jury duty should not be something that students seek to avoid.

Jury duty is one of those little things that maintains the principles upon which our great nation was founded. Being tried by a jury of your peers is the right of every U.S. citizen being accused of a crime.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Trying to avoid service as a juror only makes the judicial process more tedious and difficult.

As a student, it would be relatively easy to display your summons to professors and make up the course work at a later time. Students frequently miss class for far less noble reasons and still manage to catch up.

Furthermore, serving on a jury can offer students an opportunity to attain a greater understanding of the criminal justice system while making a contribution to the community.

MONDAY'S OPINIONS

NASRINA WILLIAMS

LOUIE NOVAK

S/He Said:
Louie Novak and Nasrina Williams square off to determine the best television show of all time.

Mind on mars

Bush spaces out on the job, wastes valuable tax dollars on travel

JAMES HURLA

The president's plan to colonize the moon and eventually Mars seems to be little more than a grown-up grasping hold of his childhood dream.

Don't get me wrong – I'm all about finding the sexy spacebabes and other alien life forms that Bush has seen on television.

But what other practical purposes can this serve?

Plenty of great innovations have come from space travel – Tang, freeze-dried ice cream, "Planet of the Apes" – and this long-term mission might give us a new product.

Freeze-dried apes sound delicious.

Space travel is not a partisan issue. President John Kennedy, a Democrat, led the way in the first space race.

I am not a Bush-hater or flaming liberal – I wouldn't wish that upon anyone.

How will my tax dollars be spent? By sending various rodents, then mammals, to the moon, where they can frolic and play like previous generations only dreamed.

But I can think of several better, more cost-efficient options.

First, California will fall into the ocean soon, which will eliminate pollution and lengthen the Earth's lifespan. This will also eliminate some of the world's most annoying people.

Once pollution is down, we can turn our eyes to the north.

Canada is close to home, spacious and unassuming. The French-Canadians will be easy to get rid of – they've actually surrendered to me, personally, on multiple occasions.

The rest of the country can be swindled into giving away its land.

All we have to do is pretend to be its friend, make it feel like part of the global community, then steal its ball and leave it crying under the monkey bars.

This tactic was all too familiar to me in my childhood.

Should Canada prove (yet again) to be entirely worthless, we can colonize the oceans.

I've seen "Waterworld," and they all seemed to be doing OK. The citizens of Atlantis, according to tons of research (cartoons), ride seahorses and live in an underwater bubble.

I can see myself doing that, too.

The only downfall of staying on Earth, of course, would be that there are no three-breasted women in bars.

Admittedly, my aversion to Martian colonization is selfish.

The planet looks boring. It looks dismal.

It looks like a vast wasteland of red dirt.

We want to spend billions of dollars to go there, when Oklahoma is so close.

I won't get all uppity, though, when the spacebabes are knocking on Earth's door.

Cultural assumptions can be highly misleading

If you are from the Middle East and you have an American girlfriend, suppose her father asks you the following question:

ALTAF KARIM

How religious you are?

His question is a result of post-Sept. 11, 2001, cross-cultural climatology, so you don't need to be offended. I know the American media has been thundering about Islam – but just take it easy.

You just need to learn how much religion is required to seduce a normal young lady in the West. If you love her, silently tune down your religious ideas or so-called "suspicious" values.

Otherwise, you will end up as a pathetic loser and a writer of the book, "Dude, Where's My Girl?"

Bottom line, you don't need to educate the American public about when and where their leaders went wrong.

Just relax.

The problem of American misconceptions concerning people from other countries is not limited to those from the Middle East.

An example is when a male student from South Asia will feel more comfortable with other men, and this can be interpreted as an inclination toward a homosexual lifestyle.

The source of this discomfort around members of the opposite sex stems from the fact that in South Asia the concept of co-education is primitive.

Also, the social fabric of the society does not permit male-female interaction at large scale.

Cultural assumptions could be wrong or highly misleading.

For example, let me tell you a personal story about intercultural misconceptions and assumptions.

When I first came to the United States from Pakistan, I had a layover in New York. After finishing with immigration authorities, I approached the road transportation office where I had an encounter with a cab driver.

I saw one Sikh driver relaxing among other drivers. I asked him, "Sardar Jee, are you relaxing?" (Sardar Jee is an expression akin to the English mister).

He responded by stating, "No, I am not relaxing. Actually, my name is Gurdeep Singh."

We were both a bit lost in translation. I started communicating with him in Punjabi, our native language, and decided to travel with a him.

My reason was simple – he spoke the same language.

However, on our way from Kennedy Airport to Newark International Airport, he took a wrong exit. This caused us to get lost, and I missed my connecting flight.

He confided in me that he is unable to read English road signs.

So this small journey with a man who shared my language on U.S. soil turned into a nightmare.

There are two lessons I learned from this story.

First, I established an incorrect assumption by thinking a Punjabi-speaking driver can serve me in a more suitable manner than one whose native language is English.

Secondly, I assumed he had the necessary driving experience and English map-reading skills without asking anything in this regard.

I would like to offer a few pieces of advice to international students in order to allow others to learn from my mistakes.

Please don't try to bargain at Wal-Mart or Dillons. It doesn't work in the U.S. markets.

Also, don't try to convert the price of grocery items into your native country's currency.

This warning is especially for students from those countries where the price for a normal haircut is around 50 cents and people can buy a mountain of watermelons five feet tall with $1.

Problems begin when people make assumptions based on their perceived reality and interpretation of the world around them. This procedure does not help one describe and understand the world accurately.

First, update your assumptions according to newly acquired knowledge and information. Next, try to learn from other people's perspectives and understand how they interpret things. Third, be curious about social and cultural events. Fourth and finally, communicate and interact with people from other cultures.

This formula will help you to broaden your world view.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

No matter how much everyone tries to go on about how great Bush's national security record is, you have to remember one thing — 9/11 happened on his watch.

Now that our chief weapons inspector states that Iraq did not have any weapons of mass destruction, Bush should just cut the BS and say that we invaded Iraq to take over their oil supply.

Yeah, I'd just like to say the Fourum sucks. We like the offensive, funny comments.

I can't believe the Collegian didn't print anything about the K-State/KU basketball game on the day of the game.

Hey, Collegian, do you think you can fit any more ads in the paper?

Maybe the reason university professors are so liberal is that they actually understand what they're talking about.

There is one thing that conservatives will always be better at than liberals — that is complaining.

What is the purpose of having pie pans stringed around to a tree on campus?

This is for all of you whiners out there who complain about the Collegian. If you hate it so much, either don't read it or get on staff and do something about it. If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem.

I think it's a great idea that we give illegal aliens driver's licenses. That way we can just arrest them when they come in.

So Nebraska has Little Red, and KU has Baby Jay. Why don't we have a little Willie?

I think someone should make beer-flavored toothpaste or toothpaste-flavored beer. I can't tell which one would be a better idea.

If I knew the name of the man who created the Atkins diet, I would force-feed him bagels until he exploded.

Studies show that a man gets higher grades when he's in love.

Studies also show that a man gets lower grades when he's involved with a woman.

Note to self: Never tell a guy that "The Princess Bride" is a chick flick.

Scott Seel, since when are FHSU, WSU, ESU or PSU in the Big 12 Conference?

I think it's hilarious when girls wear tiny skirts and low-cut shirts despite the freezing cold weather. Bless you for giving guys something to stare at even in the winter.

Hey, Collegian, you better watch out, my sociology teacher is out to get you.

Why do so many K-State fans come to the KU game? Why don't they come to the other games? They must be KU fans.

Does anybody remember when the Fourum used to be funny?

Did anybody ever notice that Mike Seaver's best friend on "Growing Pains" is named Dick Boner?

Who would have thought I'd meet a really amazing girl in Marlatt Hall?

Somehow I just cannot seem to shake this reoccurring Kelly Osbourne dream.

Is it me or are the Classy Cats just extremely gorgeous?

Don't buy season tickets if you are going to sell them to KU fans.

George Bush — he lied, they died.

Breaking up is hard to do

Ultimate Fakebook to say goodbye to music scene

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ultimate Fakebook will perform one of its final all-ages shows tonight at PJ's.

For devoted fans of UFB, which consists of former K-State students Eric Melin on drums, Nick Colby on bass, and Bill McShane on guitar and vocals, the amicable break-up might come as a shock.

The band has seen a relative degree of success in its eight years, due to a relentless touring schedule and the production of three albums.

Colby explained the break-up was necessary for the band's members.

"We've just been doing it for a long time. We wanted to do different things. We're all on the same page, but we want to move on."

Moving on does not mean all of the members will quit their musical endeavors.

Although Bill McShane plans to move to Los Angeles to pursue a career in film editing, Melin and Colby have plans that will keep them in the music business.

"There are other bands that I plan to hook up with and tour with," Colby said.

Melin and Colby will make up the rhythm section for the band Dead Girls Ruin Everything, which will play before UFB tonight and features Cameron Hawk and JoJo Longbottom, formerly of Podstar.

If you go
Ultimate Fakebook
What: Band's last all-ages show in Manhattan.
When: 9 tonight
Where: PJ's, 1129 Laramie

Although tonight's show will be one of the last all-ages shows the band will perform, it will be doing one more later this semester in Manhattan.

For the fans, these will be an emotional set of shows, but UFB promises to end on a memorable note.

"The last show will be a total blow-out. There are a lot of fans who will be emotional, but I know that I will be playing with Bill and Eric again, just not as Ultimate Fakebook," Colby said.

Students not automatically excused from serving jury duty

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students don't always realize they might be required to serve jury duty during the academic year.

Pam Clark, administrative assistant and jury coordinator for Riley County, said students potentially can be excused from their duties if they have prior commitments.

"Students are not exempt from jury duty," she said. "The student should check and see if they have a conflict and if so, contact me, and I will forward it to the judge who will make the decision."

Clark said that at any point in the process, a juror can request to be excused, but students are treated no differently by the system.

"The initial request goes to the chief judge and then moves on to the judge presiding over the case," she said.

Students who attend K-State from other counties might be able to be excused from their duties at home without having to report.

Also, Clark said, students who are from Manhattan but are living elsewhere would be excused from serving in Riley County unless they were available during their summer months, in which case their jury duty would be postponed.

...at any point in the process a juror can request to be excused, but students are treated no differently by the system.

Clark said each court is different, so it's hard to say for sure how students from counties other than Manhattan should handle their summons.

Sharon Stephens, jury coordinator for Johnson County, said if a student is called to serve jury duty, they are not required to report.

She said students would be excused for one year or longer, depending on when their name came up again.

Cindy Nies, jury clerk for panel C in Geary County, said students who live in Geary County would still be required to report.

"If they have an address in Riley County, they are not required to report," she said.

Students who still live in Geary County can be deferred until the summer months.

Fast facts
Valid excuses for getting out of jury duty

- Persons more than 70 years of age.
- Persons who have active care of a child under age 10 whose health would be jeopardized by their absence.
- Persons whose services are so essential to the operation of a business that it would be put in jeopardy by their absence.
- Full-time members in active service in the Armed Forces.
- Full-time members of police or fire department.
- Volunteer safety personnel including volunteer firefighters and members of a rescue squad.
- Full-time public official of state or local government or someone appointed by an elected official.
- Full-time students registered to vote in Geary and other counties can be excused from duty without reporting.
- Students registered to vote in Riley and Johnson counties aren't exempt from jury duty but can be excused with consent.

Wichita's Boeing CEO says no plans to sell soon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – Boeing Co. has no immediate plans to sell its 75-year-old manufacturing facility in Wichita, although the aircraft manufacturer's chief executive acknowledged Thursday that the company had studied the possibility.

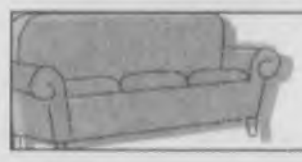
In a conference call, CEO Harry Stonecipher said each division of the company makes facility-use studies but that sometimes nothing comes of those studies.

"The long answer and the short answer is there's been no decision made to do anything with Wichita other than what it's doing," Stonecipher said during the conference call to discuss the company's fourth-quarter earnings.

"Are there studies going on? You bet," he said. "Wichita, whether there's a Boeing sign on the side of the building or another sign on the side of the building, is very important to the future of the Boeing company."

The comments were the first time Stonecipher had responded directly to reporters' questions about a story published over the weekend in The Seattle Times that indicated the aircraft manufacturer was considering the potential sale of the facility.

The Wichita plant, which employs about 12,400 people, houses the largest remaining segment of aircraft-component manufacturing within Boeing.



"We're going to have these things come up because I've said it as plainly as I can," Stonecipher said. "We study the future of every facility that we own at some point in time."

He also said nobody has talked with him about buying the Wichita plant _ and added that there are few companies that could afford the facility if it were for sale.

Stonecipher reassured Kansas politicians Tuesday that his company's future will always include Wichita.

The company beat expectations for the fourth quarter, nearly doubling its earnings thanks to a $1.1 billion federal tax refund that offset the continuing decline of its once-dominant commercial airplane business. The company's stock closed up 76 cents at $42.30 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Underdogs' game

Mediocre quarterbacks face off in Sunday's Super Bowl XXXVIII

By Marshall Ice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Super Bowl is up for grabs.

Defense wins championships, and both teams – the New England Patriots and the Carolina Panthers – have top-10 defenses.

New England is just two years removed from a last-minute Super Bowl win. In fact, the Patriots have made it to the final game of the year in three of the last eight seasons.

In 2003 Carolina, who joined the NFL in 1995, reached the post season for only the second time.

During the past few NFL seasons it seemed as though the more scrutinized a quarterback was, the more likely he was to win the Super Bowl.

This may be good news for Panthers quarterback Jake Delhomme. Before this season, the maligned signal caller fit the role of underdog.

New England quarterback Tom Brady was unproven until he won Super Bowl XXXVI playing that same role.

Undrafted, Brad Johnson did it for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers last season. As an unwanted free agent, Trent Dilfer was at the helm for the Baltimore Ravens following the 2000 season. In 1999, previously unknown Kurt Warner took the St. Louis Rams all the way.

Of those quarterbacks, only Johnson entered training camp as a starter during his team's championship season. Brady is the only one to spend his entire career with one team. Warner and Dilfer were not even full-time starters this season.

When John Elway went into Super Bowl XXXII sporting a 0-3 record on Super Sunday, there were even whispers that the future Hall of Fame quarterback could not win the big one. Elway used football's biggest stage to silence his critics as he went on to lead the Denver Broncos to back-to-back Super Bowl wins.

After signing with his hometown team as an undrafted free agent out of the University of Louisiana-Lafayette, Delhomme only played during the regular season in '99 and '02.

Carolina signed Delhomme to a two-year, $4 million deal in the off-season. However, he started the season as a backup to 37-year-old Rodney Peete.

Delhomme has shown pocket poise and he does have big game experience.

While playing in NFL Europe, he guided the Frankfurt Galaxy to a league title with a victory in the World Bowl.

"NFL Europe is important," Delhomme told the Associated Press on Thursday. "You go over and play. You get game experience."

New England and Carolina are both

Super Bowl can't compare to Bud Bowl

LOUIE NOVAK

Fifteen years ago, I witnessed the greatest Super Bowl win in my lifetime.

I was 8 years old and remember the epic battle like it happened the other day.

The year was 1988, and in a thriller, my team etched out our arch rival in a 20-17 victory on Super Bowl Sunday.

In what was to become the standard for beer-bottle football rivalries, Budweiser won the first annual "Bud Bowl I" over rival Bud Light.

I ask you this: Who would have predicted Bud's nose tackle The Freezer (aka "The Appliance of Defiance") would be brought in on offense for a short-yardage touchdown run?

I know I didn't expect it.

And although many longtime Bud fans have never forgiven Coach Budka for not giving the ball to legendary running back Walt "Smoothness" Paydirt, I thought his move was genius.

The reason I say this is the greatest Super Bowl game I ever saw is because I have never really cared about the teams playing since my time on this earth.

As a die-hard Chiefs fan, I hate every team in the NFL except for my hometown squad.

The thing is, I could give a rip who wins and who loses – I just want to see a good game.

And that is where the problem occurs.

Very rarely is the Super Bowl an actual game. Although we have been lucky a few times in recent years, the most exciting part of Super Bowl Sunday more often than not has been the commercials.

And the best Super Bowl commercials of all-time are hands down the Bud Bowls, and I want to know what happened to them?!

English equestrian team ready for spring season

By Levi Wolters
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The top-ranked K-State equestrian team begins its 2004 spring season with a weekend show in Evanston, Ill.

Ranked first in their respective region, many team members said they are confident they can maintain the momentum they gained during a strong fall season.

English coach Meghan Cunningham said the expectations for the team have not changed from the fall to the spring.

"We are right where we want to be," Cunningham said. "We have a lot of strong riders who have gotten us to where we're at now."

Those riders include juniors Allison Woodworth and Dehlia Burdan, who are considered two of the top open riders in the region. The Wildcats also look for strong showings from junior Natalie Bennett and sophomore Lauren Demmel.

"I just want to continue from where I left off in the second day of our last show back in October," said Burdan.

"There is a lot more pressure than last year. People remember us."

Even with only one week of practice since winter break, the team seems confident the transition from the fall season to the spring season will have little effect on performance.

"There really is no difference between the two seasons, besides the weather and the long break," Cunningham said. "We encouraged everyone to ride over break, and they came back and practiced well."

Being an away show, the team is required to ride horses that they have not ridden before.

"It's a lot harder than people think," said Burdan. "We get to watch the horses warm up, and then we essentially get in the stirrups and go."

The Cats will be joined by co-hosts Northern Illinois and Northwestern, as well as Truman State, Southwest Missouri State, Southern Illinois and Washington University in the two-day show.

"Northwestern has the home field advantage," Burdan said. "They know their own horses, but we have talented riders and should be able to perform well."

CFB | CU accused of using sex parties for recruiting

Prospective Colorado football players were recruited with sex parties where women say they were raped, and school officials have resisted demands to stop the practice, according to depositions of a prosecutor and a police officer.

Boulder County District Attorney Mary Keenan, a potential witness in a federal lawsuit filed by a woman who says she was raped at a 2001 party attended by football recruits, made the statement during an October deposition, which was obtained by KUSA-TV.

School officials have denied Keenan's accusations.

In her statement, Keenan said she met with athletic department officials after a 17-year-old girl reported she was raped by a football player or a recruit at party in 1997.

Keenan said she met with university officials again after a woman said she was raped at the 2001 party. Keenan said she didn't believe school officials took her complaints seriously.

Tennis | Agassi proves beatable in Melbourne

Agassi

Defending champion Andre Agassi was beaten in the Australian Open semifinals Thursday, losing to a surging Marat Safin in five sets.

Agassi, bidding for his ninth Grand Slam title, fell 7-6 (6), 7-6 (6), 5-7, 1-6, 6-3 to an opponent who ousted top-ranked Andy Roddick in the quarterfinals.

CBB | Kansas women's coach taking medical leave

Washington

Kansas women's coach Marian Washington said Thursday that she is taking a medical leave of absence, effective immediately.

In a news conference, Washington did not elaborate on the nature of her medical condition but said it has affected her for some time.

Athletic director Lew Perkins said the condition is not life-threatening.

Washington did not set a timetable for her return.

Washington is in her 31st year at Kansas, with a 559-356 record. She will be inducted into the Women's Basketball Hall of Fame later this year.

Kansas is 8-9 overall, 1-5 in Big 12 Conference play, and has lost four straight games. The Jayhawks play Oklahoma State on Saturday.

MLB | Baseball approves Dodgers sale

The $430 million sale of the Los Angeles Dodgers from News Corp. to Boston real estate developer Frank McCourt was approved unanimously Thursday by baseball owners.

The price is the second-highest for a baseball team, trailing only the $660 million paid for the Boston Red Sox two years ago. The highly leveraged purchase, likely to be finalized within a week, probably will set off the third change in management in six years for the marquee franchise, which hasn't advanced to the playoffs since 1996.

News Corp. bought the team in March 1998 from the O'Malley family for $311 million. The corporation quickly tired of running the club, and former movie executive Robert Daly took over as chief executive officer in October 1999 after purchasing a minority stake.

MLB | Closer clears waivers and is released

Former Seattle Mariners closer Kazuhiro Sasaki cleared waivers Thursday and was released.

Sasaki, who turns 36 next month, plans to continue his career in Japan. He completed paperwork this week in Seattle to terminate his contract, giving up a guaranteed $8.5 million for next season.

He spent four seasons in Seattle, becoming the team's career leader with 129 saves.

Hunger pains

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's 2:30 a.m.

Surprisingly, you have found your way home after quite an eventful night. As you lay on your sofa trying to make the room stop whirling, you realize you have a bad case of the late-night munchies.

On the verge of passing out, your brain ponders a last deep thought.

Gumby's or Pizza Shuttle?

Although it is debated which food will give you the most joy after you reach the bottom of your proverbial can or glass, it is almost certain students will try to find something in which to relieve their uncontrollable hunger pangs.

Dianna Schalles, nutritionist for Lafene Health Center, said she does not condone excessive drinking but does realize many women do restrict their diet with the thought of drinking after.

"I am not an expert in alcohol metabolism. However, before you go to an event where you know alcohol will be consumed, you should eat fat and protein because it takes longer to digest. Those are both part of a well-balanced diet anyway," she said.

Schalles also takes part in nutrient analysis and found that people are 98 percent more likely to consume more calories on the days they binge drink without food.

Pizza is a popular food due to its low price and quick delivery.

Two businesses that commonly accommodate customers are Gumby's Pizza and Pub and Pizza Shuttle.

Because both places are open well after midnight, they must deal with the regular dinner customers, as well as those going back for a late-night helping.

Eric Buttner, a manager at Pizza Shuttle, said pizza is probably a good food for students to eat before or after drinking.

"Pizza contains bread, and that will help soak up the alcohol," he said.

Gumby's bar manager Shawn Leeth said he can relate to what students go through since he is a senior in life science and criminology at K-State.

"Beer and pizza just go well together," he said.

Casey Wilkerson, senior in finance, and Brandon Lieneke, freshman in open-option, both 21, usually consume alcohol about three to four times a week.

They said they agree it is important to eat before drinking, but also to eat afterwards.

"I usually grill food before and cook quesadillas or something afterwards," Wilkerson said. "I eat really whatever. The more greasy, the less likely you are to get a hangover.

Lieneke said he finds anything that is healthy to be upsetting when mixed with drinking. He too has less of a concern with counting calories and can usually be found at Taco Bell or Bob's Diner after a night out.

"I always hate it when girls are worried about their figure. It's always the ones that shouldn't be worried, too. Drinking is supposed to be fun and everyone should have a good time and not worry about the 'extra calories,'" he said.

Did you know
Drinking and food

- Drinking coffee will not trigger your brain back to full alertness. Only letting time work its magic will do the trick.
- Alcohol is a stimulant to hunger. People usually consume around one-third more calories when eating after consuming alcohol.
- It takes an average of one to two hours to metabolize one beer, one four-ounce glass of wine or one shot of liquor.
- Eating two tablespoons of honey before or after drinking will aid in metabolizing alcohol. The vitamin B in it will also reduce hangovers.
- Drinking a cup of broth or bouillon after drinking will replace fluids and will not cause nausea. Sports drinks and water are also helpful.
- Although fatty foods are generally unhealthy and should usually be avoided, foods with grease will line the intestines, causing alcohol to take longer to absorb.

'Giselle' to begin spring season for McCain performances

Season features both comedy and drama

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The spring season of the 2003-04 McCain Performance Series begins in two weeks. This season offers a blend of the theatrical and the musical, the traditional and the new.

"It's a great season," said Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain Auditorium. "A couple of shows are already selling fast."

One of those shows is the ballet "Giselle," which opens the season Feb. 6. Performed by the Moscow Festival Ballet, "Giselle" is the story of the tragic and unrequited love between peasant girl Giselle and Count Albrecht.

As well as being romantic, Jackson said, the ballet has a spooky science fiction element as well.

"It's such a beautiful story and ballet," Jackson said. "The music is exquisite, and it's something you don't see very often – a show of this quality."

Two other shows that are selling fast are "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" and "The Importance of Being Earnest," which show in February and March, respectively.

"The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" is the adaptation of the classic book by Mark Twain, featuring the characters of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn. The Kennedy Center will put on the play Feb. 14.

The Shenandoah Shakespeare Co. will perform "The Importance of Being Earnest" on March 7. This Oscar Wilde play brings a bit of British humor to McCain.

"It's witty and funny, but not in a TV-sitcom way," Jackson said.

The spring season also includes instrumental acts, such as the Moscow State Radio Symphony Orchestra, Lúnasa and the Regina Carter Quartet.

Performing pieces from the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, the orchestra will play Feb. 26. The performance will feature such composers as Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Rachmaninov.

The Irish quintet Lúnasa will bring Irish folk music to McCain on March 14, just in time for St. Patrick's day.

Ann Murray, associate professor of family studies and human services and the president of the Friends of McCain volunteer group, said the performance should fill patrons with the spirit of the Irish. She said the performance would get people in the mood for St. Patrick's Day.

Paige Leitnaker, junior in psychology and president of the McCain Ambassadors, said this was the reason Lúnasa was scheduled for that date.

On March 17, the Regina Carter Quartet will perform. The jazz violinist and her ensemble bring their soulful music from Detroit.

For those who are wanting to combine the theater with instrumentals, the opera "Rigoletto" will be performed by the Teatro Lirico d'Europe on March 4. The opera will feature soloists, orchestra and chorus and will be sung in Italian.

Though the schedule is a less full than last season's, Murray said the performances are still of high quality.

"This year we didn't have quite as many performances as in the past," Murray said, "but the ones coming are good."

Irish quintet Lúnasa is one of the many acts headlining the McCain Performance Series.

Sebelius' budget spurs debate at Senate

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student senators voiced concern and frustration over Kathleen Sebelius' budget proposal at their meeting Thursday.

John O'Hara, student body president, said that in a Kansas Board of Regents meeting it came as a shock to decide what the cuts would mean to K-State.

He said in order to stay in line with the past proposals and goals past, a 22-percent tuition increase would be necessary, but promised that would not occur.

"It will be smaller than that, and will be smaller than 18 percent. Other than that, I can't say any more," O'Hara said.

The proposed state budget also would take $50,000 to $60,000 from student health and $20,000 from research budgets, O'Hara said.

"We are doing our best. We do need everyone's help to speak to parents and faculty and get out and vote, because that's our best bet," O'Hara said.

The proposal would take this money from student privilege fees to fill the holes in the state budget, something O'Hara said has not happened in K-State's history.

"This is a specialized tax for students, but everyone will benefit from it," he said.

The meeting also produced discussion on privilege fee distribution and residence hall increases.

Hayley Urkevich, privilege fee committee chair, said her committee is looking to redistribute money. She said the committee wants to restrict funds back to their original intent.

"We will be reviewing the Office of Student Activities and Services and SafeRide in the next couple of weeks," Urkevich said.

The Department of Housing and Dining Services will boost residence hall costs 7 percent next year to accommodate suites and redevelopment of the Jardine complex.

"We didn't have to make it this much, but we decided to bump the increase a little to speed up the process," Smith said. "We wanted to make the atmosphere one that would make people want to return."

Governor to increase funding for Regents schools

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has announced a plan to increase funding for Kansas Board of Regents schools by $18 million for fiscal year 2005.

"These are challenging budget times, and quite frankly, we are in a better position in Kansas than many other states," said Nicole Corcoran, communications director for the governor.

She said the governor is committed to attempting to support Kansas schools.

"Our children must obtain higher education at a university or technical school if they want to compete in 21st-century jobs," Corcoran said.

She said the Board of Regents has publicly and privately told the governor they appreciate the increase but wish they could receive more.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said it is important to realize this is just a proposal and thus could still see some adjustments.

"I hope we can hold on to the good things in this budget for K-State and for all of the regent schools," she said.

Carlin said she believes Senate Bill 345, passed in the late 1990s to guarantee state employees a pay raise over the next four years but has lost its funding, is important.

"We think it needs to be fully funded, and we are working toward making that possible," she said.

Carlin said the goal of the proposal is to keep tuition as low as possible for the students and their families, as well as provide an increase in salary and fringe benefits for university and other state employees.

The proposed budget would provide such funding, but the increases are fairly modest.

"The governor's attempt to increase the amount for higher education is for three years' time and is divided out among all the schools," she said.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the university is pleased with the intent of the proposal.

Rawson said the proposal included a 3-percent pay raise for all state employees.

However, K-State budget director Cindy Bontrager said the governor also planned to make cuts in several different areas of K-State general use budget, which is used for the base budget year to year.

In all, nearly $4.5 million will be cut from K-State's general use and restricted budgets, but Rawson said these funds would be saved as a result of the increased efficiency created by the cuts.

The cuts in the proposal are designed to save money by increasing the efficiency of certain state programs, he said.

"I trust those savings will be there," he said. "I hope they'll be there, but I haven't seen them yet."

Any funds not recovered by the efficiency increases would have to be accounted for through practices like increasing savings and decreasing expenditures, in addition to tuition

"Some programs, like extension, have the biggest challenge because they cannot control their income," Rawson said.

These programs, he said, get a large majority of their funding through unpredictable methods such as revenue from sold crops or livestock or else from federal block grants of which they have no control over.

"Vet-Med, K-State-Salina and the main campus can control tuition rates, so it's a little less complicated," he said.

Rawson said if K-State was to cover the potential shortfalls in this budget solely with tuition, it would require an 8-percent tuition increase, but that there would be other ways to recoup the money if it was not there.

Rawson and Bontrager both said, despite the governor's optimism, they were still not counting on the savings to materialize.

Sebelius' plan

Senate Bill 345 was intended to provide state employees, including college professors, with higher wages and fringe benefits. The final two years of the bill (2004-05) have not been funded. Part of Sebelius' proposed $18 million would go to funding the final two years.

Suicide bomber kills 10, wounds 50 in Jerusalem

By Karin Laub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM – A suicide bomber struck a bus near Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Jerusalem residence Thursday, killing 10 Israelis and wounding 50 in the deadliest attack in four months and disrupting modest U.S. efforts to restart peace talks.

The blast blew off the roof of the green city bus. Survivors crawled out of broken bus windows. The bombing was only 50 feet from Sharon's house, but he was away at the time.

The bomber was a Palestinian police officer – causing much chagrin within the Palestinian Authority, which has been under international pressure to use its police force to stop such attacks. The attack coincided with a prisoner exchange between Israel and the Lebanese guerrilla group Hezbollah – a deal questioned by many Israelis.

Israel said it would not seal off the West Bank and Gaza Strip, a routine response to attacks; but the military was divided over whether to retaliate for the bombing, security officials said. Sharon and Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz met late Thursday to discuss options.

Vice Premier Ehud Olmert acknowledged that Israeli reprisals have proven ineffective and has instead said Israel should withdraw quickly from parts of the West Bank and Gaza Strip and impose a boundary on the Palestinians – something Sharon has suggested he would do by June if peace efforts fail.

and it's clearly beyond control, then we're going to break that party up," Hegarty said.

The owners of the home will be then be contacted. Hegarty said a citation might be written for noise violation, and officers will look for open containers and minors in possession.

"There are some parties that we get to that there are hundreds of people, and there is no way the people in this house are going to control this party," Hegarty said. "Our biggest concern with a large party is how it affects the neighbors."

Houses that frequently have parties are watched closely, Hegarty said.

Despite some student complaints, Riley County Assistant Attorney Brenon Odle said he thought the county's police officers were reasonable.

He said that from a practical standpoint, it is not feasible to ticket everybody at a party.

"It's tough when they break up a party," said Odle. "They could probably write up a lot of tickets. It's pretty much up to the officer."

It is also at the officer's discretion to ask to see identification based on how young a person appears.

Last March, the Kansas Supreme Court ruled in the case that "a law enforcement officer may stop any person in a public place based upon specific and articulable fact raising a reasonable suspicion that such person has committed or is about to commit a crime."

Odle said the ruling was vague but is the law. If an officer sees someone who looks underage and is in possession, the officer can ask for identification and issue a citation.

Police officers also may force entry into a house only if a violent crime is taking place. Otherwise, partyers do not have to allow them inside or even answer the door.

However, if people are unwilling to cooperate, they may be issued an affidavit, summons or arrest warrant. A search warrant probably would not be issued unless the violation was more than noise or alcohol, such as narcotics, Hegarty said.

Whether violators cooperate or not, any action taken would be determined by the officer, Hegarty said. The officer may make an arrest, write a citation, file a report or simply give a warning, but for the next two years, the county could choose to file a statute of limitations.

"Almost all misdemeanor offenses are at an officer's discretion," Hegarty said. "Officers are invested with a tremendous amount of freedom unless dealing with a felony."

AT A BAR

When officers circulate a bar, they are watching for people who look underage. If someone is underage, a citation will be issued, Hegarty said.

RCPD works with bouncers and doormen. If the bar encounters an ID it thinks is fake, it usually calls the police for confirmation.

"An establishment risks losing its license if it allows in underage drinkers and they're in possession of alcohol," Hegarty said. "If we find them in possession of alcohol, it could lead them to losing their license."

If the person is from out-of-state, he or she will be taken to jail. Kansas law allows physical arrest to ensure a person doesn't flee the state.

Hegarty said most minors leave a bar at the sight of a cop for fear of being caught.

If anyone leaves a bar and is intoxicated, an officer may approach or follow.

"We encounter people who appear to be intoxicated because there's a lot of parking on the streets in Aggieville, going to their cars," Hegarty said. "We make contact with them. 'Look, don't drive; you're under the influence of alcohol.'"

Manhattan does not have an ordinance prohibiting public intoxication. Officers may approach an intoxicated person for his or her own safety.

State statutes allow police officers to take intoxicated persons into protective custody to minimize the dangers of being taken advantage of or alcohol poisoning.

A citation may be written if a person is in possession of an open container.

"You cannot have an open container, no matter what age you are, on any type of public property: sidewalks, city alleys, city streets, parking lots," Hegarty said.

IN A CAR

If a person does choose to drive, officers will be watching for a traffic infraction such as failing to maintain a lane of traffic, running a red light or making a wrong turn.

Hegarty said officers usually know at first contact whether a person is impaired because he or she will have bloodshot eyes and smell like alcohol.

"If the officer has probable cause that you're under the influence, he's going to arrest you anyway," Hegarty said.

Once back at the station, a person may refuse to take the intoxilyzer test. By doing so, he or she automatically loses driving privileges for one year.

A DUI also is probable cause for an officer to search the vehicle for contraband. If only alcohol is suspected, the passenger compartment will be searched, Hegarty said.

"We would be happy if we never had to respond to any call and everyone was doing what they were supposed to do," Hegarty said. "The goal of law enforcement is voluntary compliance."

I don't care if the Carolina Panthers (the NFL's version of the Florida Marlins) beat the New England Patriots (are people serious when they suggest they are a dynasty?).

I don't care about any of it.

I want to see Budweiser stomp the living hell out of Bud Light.

I want Bud to ditch these lame Cedric the Entertainer commercials and whatever else they have planned, and bring back the Bud Bowls.

I don't want to hear "Wazzup," and I don't want to see those frogs.

I want Coach Budka back, and until my Chiefs make the big game (which is next year, baby!), all I care about is bringing the Bud Bowl back.

SOLDIERS | U.S. is planning attack in Afghanistan against terrorists

60 miles southwest of the capital, Kabul. The soldiers were working around a weapons cache when the blast happened.

Centcom spokesman Capt. Bruce Frame said the cause had yet to be determined in the blast, among the most damaging blows to American troops since they deployed in Afghanistan more than two years ago.

The Taliban were driven from power but sporadic fighting has continued. Earlier this month, the U.S. death toll reached 100. Sixteen of those deaths occurred in combat – including seven when two helicopters took enemy fire in March, 2002.

The number includes deaths in other areas of Operation Enduring Freedom, such as a helicopter crash in the Philippines nearly two years ago that killed 10 American soldiers – the deadliest in the operation. Seven soldiers were also killed on Jan. 9, 2002 when their tanker plane slammed into a mountain in Pakistan.

The United States provides 9,000 of the 11,000-member coalition troops stationed in Afghanistan. The Army is preparing a spring offensive against Taliban and al-Qaeda holdouts amid concern that operations in Afghanistan are not as effective in breaking up terrorist networks as they had hoped.

Separately, investigators sifted through evidence Thursday from suicide bombings that killed British and Canadian soldiers in Kabul the two previous days. The ousted Taliban regime has claimed responsibility for both blasts.

The cause of Thursday's weapons cache blast was not immediately known. The wounded soldiers were evacuated to a hospital at Bagram Air Base, headquarters for U.S.-led coalition in Afghanistan.

The names of the victims were being withheld pending notification of relatives.

Troops at Camp Souter, the British base in eastern Kabul, held a memorial ceremony Thursday for the soldier killed the day before by a suicide bomber. The victim was identified as Pvt. Jonathan Kitulagoda, 23, from Plymouth in southwest England.

Commanders and diplomats joined about 150 soldiers to hear readings, prayers and tributes from Kitulagoda's friends in a private gathering, said Capt. Tom Smith, spokesman for the 300-strong British contingent. Kitulagoda's body likely will be flown home next week, he said.

Kitulagoda was killed when a suicide bomber detonated a yellow-and-white taxi next to an open-topped British Land Rover jeep. Four other British soldiers were wounded. The attack came a day after a Canadian soldier was killed in a similar suicide attack.

well coached with an emphasis on conservative, mistake-free offenses. Both coaches are undefeated in the playoffs with their current teams. Patriots coach Bill Belichick is 6-1 in the playoffs, including a perfect 5-0 with New England.

Carolina's John Fox is 3-0 in the postseason. Fox, who took over last season, led his team to a 7-9 record in 2002. This season the Panthers were 11-5 to New England's 14-2.

On the injury front, Panthers running back Stephen Davis should be near 100 percent back from the strained left quadricep he suffered in a playoff game three weeks ago.

Davis, who signed as a free agent in the off-season, has twice as many rushing yards as Patriots counterpart Antowain Smith. The Washington Redskins had given up on Davis, 29, when they declined to re-sign him after last season.

Patriots inside linebacker Tedy Bruschi, who leads New England with 128 tackles, is listed as probable with a right calf injury sustained in the AFC Championship game.

The Patriots have to re-adjust to playing away from home. Their last road game was Dec. 20, a span of seven weeks.

Former K-State standout Jarrod Cooper is a nickel back and special teams player for the Panthers. Cooper, K-State's co-defensive MVP in 1998, was Carolina's fifth-round draft pick in 2001.

He appeared in 12 games during the regular season.

Kick-off is set for 5:25 p.m. at Houston's Reliant Stadium. The facility, which hosted the 2002 Big XII football championship game between Oklahoma and Colorado, has a retractable roof in case of inclement weather.

According to www.superbowl.com, last year more than 138 million people tuned in to make Super Bowl XXXVII the most-watched television event in history.

Several high profile musicians are booked to perform Sunday. The pregame show features Aerosmith, Toby Keith and Willie Nelson.

Bombers kill more than 50 at Kurdish offices in Iraq

By Scheherezade Faramarzi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRBIL, Iraq – Two suicide bombers with explosives wired to their bodies struck the offices of the country's two main Kurdish parties in nearly simultaneous attacks Sunday, killing at least 56 people and wounding more than 235 in the deadliest assault in Iraq in six months.

Attacks struck in the Kurdish heartland and took a heavy toll among senior leaders of Iraq's most pro-American ethnic group.

Elsewhere, an American soldier was killed and 12 were wounded in a rocket attack on a logistics base in Balad, 50 miles north of Baghdad, the U.S. command said. The death raised to 523 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the Iraq conflict began in March.

The Irbil attackers slipped into the offices of the Kurdistan Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan along with hundreds of well-wishers gathering for the Muslim holiday of Eid al-Adha, or the Feast of Sacrifice.

Kurdish television said both bombers were dressed as Muslim clerics.

Leaders of both parties, whose militias fought alongside U.S. soldiers during the invasion of Iraq last year, were receiving hundreds of visitors to mark the start of the four-day holiday when the blasts went off.

Guards said they did not search people because of the tradition of receiving guests during the holiday. Neither party's top leader – Jalal Talabani of the PUK and Massoud Barzani of the KDP – was in Irbil when the attacks occurred.

Although Iraq has suffered numerous suicide bombings in recent months, the attack Sunday marked the first time perpetrators have worn explosives rather than using vehicles.

Storms create diversions, hazardous roads

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A shift in the pattern of a storm that came onto meteorologists' radar screens Friday caused Manhattan to get more snow Sunday night than originally predicted.

On Sunday afternoon, it appeared areas south of Manhattan, such as Council Grove, Kan., would get the heavier snow, with Manhattan receiving a maximum of six inches.

However, that prediction changed as the storm shifted north Sunday evening, putting Manhattan in the middle of the band of the storm that is likely to produce 12 inches of snow, Mary Knapp, state climatologist, said.

Although an official snowfall amount won't be available until this morning, Knapp said she estimated Manhattan had received five to six inches of snow already by 6 p.m. Sunday.

Knapp said another aspect of today's weather would be strong winds that were expected to cause drifting.

Meteorologists were seeing every indication the snow that fell all day Sunday would continue through this morning ending before noon. However, this will not be the case for areas east of Manhattan.

"The storm will fade from the west first, so Kansas City might see snow until noon or so," Knapp said.

2 dead Fort Riley soldiers identified

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Fort Riley soldiers who died last week have been identified.

Pvt. Luis Moreno, 19, died Thursday from wounds he received in an attack Jan. 23 in Baghdad. According to a Fort Riley press release, Moreno was shot while on dismounted guard at a gas station. The incident is under investigation.

Moreno

Moreno was assigned to Battery A, 4th Battalion, 1st Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division. He was from Bronx, N.Y., and had been stationed at Fort Riley since January 2003.

Also dead is Staff Sgt. Sean G. Landrus, 31, of Thompson, Ohio. He had been stationed at Fort Riley since May 1999.

Landrus died on Thursday after wounds he received in an attack Tuesday in Khalidiyah, Iraq.

According to an Associated Press story, witnesses spoke of two roadside bombs in Khalidiyah, 50 miles west of Baghdad, and close to Fallujah.

The area is a hotspot of guerrilla activity where several attacks have taken place against U.S.-led coalition forces.

Three other Fort Riley soldiers were killed in the incident, which is still under investigation.

The total number of Fort Riley soldiers killed has reached 26.

CBS apologizes for R-rated end to Super Bowl halftime

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – CBS apologized on Sunday for an unexpectedly R-rated end to its Super Bowl halftime show, when singer Justin Timberlake tore off part of Janet Jackson's top, exposing her breast.

"CBS deeply regrets the incident," spokeswoman LeslieAnne Wade said after the network received several calls about the show. The two singers were performing a flirtatious duet to end the halftime show, and at the song's finish, Timberlake reached across Jackson's leather gladiator outfit and pulled off the covering to her right breast.

The network quickly cut away from the shot, and did not mention the incident on

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Kerry finding greater appeal

Charles Krupa | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., smiles as he throws a football on his campaign plane en route to St. Louis on Wednesday. Kerry, who won the New Hampshire primary, is scheduled to campaign in St. Louis.

John Kerry took 39 percent of the New Hampshire vote last week, good enough for the win. But some campaign watchers say it's not just political savvy that makes Kerry popular, but his looks.

But Kerry told a Boston radio station that he "absolutely" never received Botox treatments, but eyebrows arched when he added, "I've never even heard of it."

THE LATEST HOLLYWOOD DIVORCE

Michael Eisner, the embattled Walt Disney Co. CEO, was dealt a blow by box-office hitmaker Pixar Inc., which ended its distribution agreement with Disney.

The partnership, which included films like "Toy Story" and "Finding Nemo," ended when Eisner failed to offer a financially sound deal to Pixar.

It gives more ammunition to former Disney directors Roy Disney and Stanley Gold, who quit the board to lead a campaign to oust Eisner.

IT'S ONLY A MOVIE

Meiwes

A German man accused of killing and eating a willing victim is trying to strike a movie deal for his story.

Armin Meiwes gained worldwide notoriety last week when he confessed to the murder of engineer Bernd-Juergen Brandes in March 2001.

He also admitted to eating at least a pound of Brandes' flesh.

Meiwes said the victim would have asked someone else to kill and eat him if he had not agreed.

GAY RIGHTS? FORGET IT

The consequences? A lot of angry students and the committed loss of the Baptist college's 150-year financial partner, Missouri Baptist Convention.

STAY AWAY FROM JACKO

Kelly

A judge has given R&B star R. Kelly permission to attend the Grammy Awards but told Kelly he had to stay away from Michael Jackson.

Kelly is awaiting trial on 21 counts of child pornography stemming from a tape allegedly showing him having sex with an underage girl. Jackson is having his own problems after being arrested on seven counts of child molestation.

OH, BARBARA

Walters

Barbara Walters said she would step down as "20/20" co-host. Reason? The blurred lines between entertainment and television.

Critics agree there seems to be more crying and sizzling subject matter intermixed with Walters' interview skills.

Asking Monica Lewinsky to explain exactly what phone sex is comes to mind.

FAR FROM SUB-PAAR

Critics this week called for reform in talk shows, saying the drill-sergeant techniques of Bill O'Reilly as well as the cheesy one-liners by Jay Leno and David Letterman are nothing compared to Jack Paar, who preceded Johnny Carson.

Paar, the original host of the "Tonight Show," died last Monday. He was 85.

Procter, Treaster announce candidacy

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The election season officially began Sunday as the first presidential candidate pair announced its campaign.

Ben Procter and Andrew Treaster, both juniors in political science, said they are ready to serve K-State students.

"We believe we have the opportunity to really serve K-State," Procter said.

Procter said he would like to build on the work of John O'Hara and Travis Stryker, the current student body president and vice president, respectively.

Procter, a College of Arts and Sciences senator, and Treaster, a Student Senate intern, said they will focus their attention on four points of progress: community, advising, technology and safety and environment with a motto of "putting students first."

"When I leave K-State, I want to leave it a better school," Treaster said. "I'm going to change this university for five, 10 and 20 years down the road. I want to be remembered as one of those leaders."

Procter said students' money is used best by exploring all diverse opportunities available in the K-State community.

"There are diversity programs on campus that are growing and changing," he said. "Your money is best served by exploring all opportunities."

In addition, Procter said he and Treaster will work to strengthen faculty advising. The pair also aims to make the campus more technologically advanced with the integration of wireless Internet. Safety and environment, Procter said, is a category that includes making SafeRide more available to students by increasing the program's funding. The category also includes efforts to improve the recycling efforts across campus.

Procter said with the pair's four issues, they hope to make the university a better place – but it won't be easy with recent tuition increases.

"In the last two and a half years, there's been over a 60-percent rise in tuition," Procter said. "This presents us the opportunity to see the great things we can do with this university. We may have trouble finding the money, but it gives us the chance to be creative."

Procter and Treaster will begin their campaign by visiting various student groups to present their four-point plan.

Procter said he became interested in running for president while speaking with his peers about the university's future.

What began as small talk among friends, he said, has turned into a campaign to make K-State a better educational environment.

"These are not only ideas that we've been bouncing around," Procter said. "These ideas can become a reality."

Flights canceled amid new worries about al-Qaeda

By Jennifer C. Kerr
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Six U.S.-bound flights from England, Scotland and France were canceled Saturday because of security concerns. The U.S. government said it had fresh indications of al-Qaeda's continued interest in targeting commercial planes flying to the United States.

British Airways grounded a flight scheduled Sunday and Monday London to Washington, as well as the return flights. Also canceled was a flight from London to Miami on Sunday. In addition, Continental Airlines said it canceled a Sunday flight from Glasgow, Scotland, to Los Angeles with a stop in Newark, N.J.

A U.S. official said there were concerns about a handful of flights on those foreign carriers and a U.S.-based airline that flies internationally.

"We continue to receive threat reporting that indicates al-Qaeda's desire to target international aviation," said Brian Roehrkasse, spokesman for the Homeland Security Department.

Canceling flights necessary for national security

Recent threats targeted at specific incoming international flights to the United States caused cancellations Saturday – a necessary action to ensure national security.

The recent cancellations were for flights originating from Great Britain and France with destinations in Washington, Miami and Los Angeles.

Considering the events of Sept. 11, 2001, it's an inconvenience we are willing to suffer.

If another attack were to occur and government officials had failed to take preventative action, we would hold them responsible for the tragedy.

It's reassuring to see officials taking steps to keep air travel safe, in addition to the already heightened airport security.

Despite the cancellations, the Homeland Security Department said there were no plans to raise the national terror alert.

This makes it easier to trust security officials when specific threats are addressed rather than raising ambiguously colored threat levels that mean nothing to the average American.

Many of the recent threats against U.S. national security have panned out to be nothing, making us view intelligence with skepticism.

However, the risk of ignoring these warnings is too great.

HE SAID/SHE SAID

TWO SIDES OF THE STORY: THE RIGHT SIDE AND THE OTHER SIDE

Must-see T.V.

'Buffy' offers smart humor, drama

NASRINA WILLIAMS

Hands down, the best television show of all time is "Buffy the Vampire Slayer."

Running for seven miraculous seasons, this show managed to combine intense drama with quick-witted humor, while utilizing story lines that emphasized the universality of the human experience.

The premise of the show was based on creator Joss Whedon's desire to see a young, attractive female with the ability to pack some punch. Falling into the fantasy and science fiction genres, the world of Buffy is one where monsters are real and the power to fight them is contained in one teenage girl.

Buffy, along with her friends and watcher, battles the forces of evil in secret so the rest of the world may remain safe from demons who kill humans for food or pleasure.

There are four main reasons why this show is the most brilliant in all of television history.

First, the dialogue is jam-packed with clever witticisms and pop culture references. Each line is masterfully created to inject humor into the intensely dramatic storyline without becoming a distraction. A friend of mine even watches his Buffy DVDs with the closed captioning on so that he doesn't miss any of the brilliant one liners.

No other show, especially "Seinfeld," has been able to do humor in such an intelligent way. Shows like Mr. Novak's "Seinfeld" use immature humor that revels in its lack of depth and only appeals to a very specific audience.

My second reason why Buffy deserves the top one spot is the way it tells universally relatable stories in a unique manner. Inherent human conflicts are transformed into monsters or mystical situations that Buffy and her gang must overcome.

For example, in season five, Buffy's kid sister is an adolescent going through an identity crisis spurred by the realization that all of her memories are fake. Themes of love and loss also are used consistently on the show.

The third reason why "Buffy" could stake "Seinfeld" any day is the creativity level of the show. To cite some examples, "Buffy" has done a silent episode almost completely lacking dialogue, as well as a musical show where all of the dialogue was performed as lyrical verse.

Finally, although Mr. Novak tries to use "Seinfeld's" popularity to prove its superiority, I am going to argue for the opposite position. Come on, when things are too popular, it's usually a sign they're pretty worthless.

Buffy's small but loyal following only proves the show is too good to be appreciated by just anybody. It's a show for people who are willing to put a little thought into their viewing experience.

"Seinfeld" may certainly be the show of choice for those who want to turn off their minds and enter the zombie-like state reserved for true couch potatoes, but there are hundreds of other shows that provide the same experience.

Buffy offers something different, but it's definitely not for everybody.

'Seinfeld' provides mindless humor

LOUIE NOVAK

I am embarrassed that a column on the genius "Seinfeld" sitcom is running next to one on "Buffy the Vampire Slayer."

It's not even an issue what is the best sitcom ever.

How in the world can someone be serious when claiming that a show based on a hottie who fights monsters with the hopes of finding true love is the best show of all time?

Are you kidding me?

"Seinfeld" blows that crap away.

The show, created by legendary comedians Jerry Seinfeld and Larry David, was a sitcom that claimed to be about nothing, and nothing was too trivial to inspire an episode.

"Seinfeld" had many complex plots, sub-plots and was very well-written.

I absolutely loved how the show would take something as silly as a personalized license plate reading "ASSMAN," and use it to bring a whole episode together in the end.

The "show about nothing" garnered countless accolades, initiated a number of words and phrases into our culture (ex. yada yada yada), and continues to draw viewers into its unique world via television syndication.

From 1990 to 1998 the sitcom was widely regarded as the small screen's most innovative show, and in 2002 TV Guide ranked "Seinfeld" No. 1 on its list of "50 Greatest Shows of All-Time."

During its run, "Seinfeld" was honored with more than 20 major awards and nearly 60 nominations.

The classic scenarios in "Seinfeld" have spawned such memories as puffy shirts, close talkers, shrinkage, killer envelopes, masters of their domain and girls with man hands.

Mrs. Williams has called this humor "immature."

She also has claimed that the sitcom lacks depth and only appeals to a very specific audience.

Forgive me if I don't need to see cast members getting married, babies being born or unexpected deaths to be entertained.

Although I never have seen her favorite sitcom, I am sure that vampire hunting is very sophisticated.

If I want to stimulate my mind by watching television, I think watching the news or "60 Minutes" would be more effective then watching "Buffy's" kid sister deal with her identity crisis.

By the way, that sounds like a great episode.

I wonder if there are any ones that deal with amnesia or evil twins who try to steal a boyfriend.

Mrs. Williams argues that I use "Seinfeld's" popularity to prove how great it is.

I am sorry that millions of other viewers agree with my opinion.

If Mrs. Williams' argument is true, I guess Clay Aiken is the best musician because a handful of tools actually enjoy his music.

The sitcom is classic and has set the bar for all other shows.

Even mentioning "Buffy" in the same sentence as "Seinfeld" is just plain dumb to me.

It says here Christopher is a senior in history and political science. Now, does he realize that religion is probably one of the major cores in history? And now he does not want anyone to learn about it, so what is the deal with that?

Coach Wooldridge is such a bad coach, even with the San Antonio Spurs he would still lose to KU.

Hey, James Hurla — rodents are mammals.

Yeah, I don't know what scientific findings Christopher Harrop is looking at, but the deeper I go into science the more I know there definitely is a creator.

Do you know what conservatives and liberals have in common? They're both blind to all the facts.

The attack on 9/11 was planned on Bill Clinton's watch, so don't just blame Bush, blame everyone.

Has anyone ever noticed the abundance of the Collegian sitting around? I think it is because of the suckiness of the Fourum. Thanks a lot.

The end is near

UFB plays last round of concerts

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although Ultimate Fakebook faces its end in the coming months, the band's members say their own music careers are far from over.

"I'm not freaked out, because I know I'll still be writing and playing music with Bill (McShane) and Eric (Melin), so it isn't like the friendship of the band has shattered," Nick Colby, UFB bassist, said.

On the band's Web site, www.ultimatefakebook.com, the members announced in a Jan. 12 release the end is near.

The band played one of its last shows Friday at PJ's, and it was intended to be their final all-ages show. However, drummer Melin said the band members are discussing the possibility of March 4 being their final all-ages show instead.

The performance will be at a location to be announced.

Ultimate Fakebook, whose influences include Cheap Trick, The Replacements and KISS, exploded onto the Manhattan music scene in 1998 and released its first album, "Electric Kissing Parties," that year on the Noisome Records label. The album was rereleased last year.

Critics also hailed their next album, "This Will Be Laughing Week," which hit stores in 2000. The band's more recent albums include "Open Up and Say Awesome" (2002) and "Before We Spark" (2003).

The band began as a four-piece act, with a drummer whose sound was more geared toward metal fans.

Bill McShane, guitarist and vocalist for UFB, said he wanted the band to take a different direction in sound.

"Once we streamlined things as far as our songwriting, we went for poppy kinds of songs," McShane said.

The band became a trio after bringing drummer Melin on board, and things started to click.

"When we got hooked up with Eric, things started going faster," McShane said. "We were all on the same musical page. Our old drummer wanted to go with a metal direction, but with Eric, we had three people all looking toward the same musical goals."

Critics began to compare the band to artists such as Jack Johnson, and UFB's prominence in the local music scene garnered the members chances to open for such bands as Cheap Trick, Good Charlotte, The Get-Up Kids and Dashboard Confessional.

Over the years, UFB's Manhattan fan base continually changed.

"It's a college town, and there's so much changeover with fans," McShane said. "We have a strong fan base in high schoolers who weren't even around when we first started."

"There was one show in Champagne, Ill., when we were going to play with Alkaline Trio," Colby said. "We had a house party at some kid's house, and about 500 to 600 people came to the show.

"Every light in the place was broken after two songs because people were going apest. The floors were bending. But it was an awesome show."

Colby said it is this kind of enthusiasm that has ensured UFB's longevity and popularity over the years.

"Most bands don't survive this long," he said. "It's a testament to our fans. It's all them. That's the only way we've survived."

McShane said he will miss the adoration of his fans, but that change is imminent for the band's members.

"It feels like it's the right time," he said. "I feel the band was awesome, and I have no regrets. It's more than anything I could've hoped to accomplish."

Colby said fans can still expect things from the band's individual members.

Although McShane will be moving to the West Coast to attend film school, Melin and Colby will remain in the area to be part of a new band with two members of Podstar.

"We're not the band that's going to try to get a reunion show in six months," he said.

McShane said, though, that the band's members are open to myriad possibilities.

"The future is very wide open for all of us," he said.

Elbow's dark lyrics combine well with imaginative instrumentals

"Cast of Thousands"
★★★★☆
Album review by Jessica Grant

"I want to explode/To pull my ribs apart/And let the sun inside."

These lyrics, taken from the new album "Cast of Thousands" by British band Elbow, can be taken several ways.

Although I am an English major and thus am taught to constantly dig for the "deeper meaning" that lies within everything, I choose to ignore my pricey education and take the lyrics at face value.

It is ridiculously icy outside, and I am practically willing to maim myself in order to feel some of the precious sun that has recently been on hiatus.

It seems Elbow agrees.

"Cast of Thousands" is the second full-length album by this Manchester quintet. The band had a ton of hype to live up to after their debut album, "Asleep in the Back," which was released in 2001 and went gold in England.

The band was then quickly nominated for the Mercury Music Prize for best new band. With their sophomore release, Elbow lived up to its publicity and managed to create a nearly perfect album.

The resulting album has tightly knit songs that are powerfully melodic, yet full of swelling momentum and sometimes dissonant feedback. Elbow knows how to be adventurous with their sound without causing the listener some sort of mental imbalance.

This is a self-assured and imaginative band that knows how to create an album that has not one song the listener would find so grating they would want to skip it.

The song "Snooks" is a reference to the blind New Orleans blues singer, Snooks Eaglin.

This song is full of strings and absurd blues-based tempos that work to lead the listener through the hypnotic song about the passing of time.

The band also uses their title to their advantage when it comes to guest musicians for the album.

Elbow is joined by a cast of thousands, including the members of the bands Doves and Alfie, the London Community Gospel Choir, a string section and the entire crowd from a Glastonbury show. The Glastonbury crowd unforgettably chants, "we still believe in love, so fk you," on the album's final track, "Grace Under Pressure."

When I bought this album, I thought it sounded pretty dark, maybe even borderline depressing. I wondered if it would be in the best interest of my sanity to listen to something that seemed to reflect the dreary weather.

However, as I have begun to understand the lyrics and how they compliment the full, sweeping sound of the band, I find myself reaching for this CD repeatedly.

I am drawn to the simple and ironic lyrical style of Guy Harvey and the Doves/Coldplay/later Pink Floyd musical style of the band.

This album is definitely intense, but it has enough carefree moments to remind our elders that our generation is not as scornful as they might think.

Kicker deserves Super Bowl accolade

MATT GIRARD

Adam Vinatieri did it again.

Although he kicked the 41-yard field goal to win, Vinatieri had to overcome obstacles that might have subdued any other kicker in the league.

After missing a 31-yard field goal attempt in the first half and having a second attempt blocked, Vinatieri could have let his first attempts get to him – but he didn't.

Vinatieri
PATRIOTS KICKER

As quarterback Tom Brady led the drive to put the Patriots into Vinatieri's field goal range, the kicker calmly took a couple of practice kicks and then played catch with a teammate before he took the field with nine seconds left.

He had been through this before.

Two years ago against the St. Louis Rams, Vinatieri hit the game-winner as time expired to give the Patriots its first championship.

The eight-year pro simply did his job.

With a perfect snap and a perfect hold, Vinatieri kicked the perfect field goal.

Straight down the middle and with enough distance to make it from at least 10 yards or more, he cemented himself as one of the greatest clutch kickers of all-time.

Vinatieri has done it twice in three years, and both times he has done it like the consummate professional.

In the only stadium that Vinatieri had missed a field goal all season, he hit the one that counted.

He showed perseverance and heart by never letting the pressure of the situation overwhelm him.

Vinatieri's coach, Bill Belichick, never had a doubt about his kicker.

"If you've got to have one kick with the game on the line, he's the one I'd want kicking them," Belichick said.

Even though Brady was named Most Valuable Player in both Super Bowl XXXVI and XXXVIII, Vinatieri is the reason the Patriots were crowned world champions and should have been named MVP.

Cats continue to roll after loss to Nebraska, beat OU 74-65

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's basketball team extended its home winning streak to 28 by defeating No. 20 Oklahoma 74-65 Saturday.

Nicole Ohlde had 27 points and 10 rebounds, and Laurie Koehn added 24 points to help the No. 12 Wildcats improve to 15-3 (6-1). The win was the 13th in the last 14 games for K-State.

Even though the Wildcats did not play their best game of the season, the team was happy to get past a tough Sooner team.

"I wouldn't say we played a great 40 minutes," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We competed hard, but not always smart. We let mistakes on offense carry over to the defensive end.

The game was closer than Patterson and her players would have liked. Oklahoma used a 6-0 run at the end of the first half to take a 37-36 lead into the locker room.

The deficit seemed to ignite K-State, and the Wildcats came out on an 11-4 run to take a 47-41 lead.

Ohlde said team focus was the difference between the first and second half.

"In the second half, we just calmed down and weren't really in a hurry," Ohlde said. "In the first half we rushed things a lot. We didn't take the time to face up and try to find an opening."

K-State forward Kendra Wecker was held to a career-low two points on 1-of-6 shooting.

The junior forward played only eight first-half minutes due to foul trouble but was able to pull down nine rebounds and dished out four assists during the game.

In 40 minutes of play, the forward scored eight points, grabbed 10 rebounds, and had seven assists from the point guard spot.

Patterson referred to Mahoney's play against Oklahoma as K-State's "spark."

"Megan's play was extraordinary," Patterson said. "In the second half, she made us the quality basketball team that we were."

Oklahoma was never able to get within eight points in the final 2:15 of play, and the Wildcats were able to escape with the win.

K-State has won two straight over Oklahoma and two in a row since the upset loss to the Huskers in Nebraska.

The Wildcats get back to work Wednesday when they travel to Iowa State.

Mahoney sets up big plays for win

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second consecutive game, the junior forward turned into a point guard, and for the second consecutive game she delivered, as No. 12 K-State (15-3, 6-1) beat No. 20 Oklahoma (13-6, 3-5), 74-65.

In 40 minutes of play Saturday, Megan Mahoney grabbed 10 rebounds, scored eight points, dished seven assists, stole three balls and blocked two.

"She's a tremendous athlete and a really tough competitor," Sooner coach Sherri Coale said. "I think she is one of the most underrated players in this league. She's a good all-around player and would be good in anybody's system on anybody's team.

"But she is especially good for this squad, because she's that piece that they don't get from any other source."

With senior forward Amy Dutmer replacing the injured Chelsea Domenico, Mahoney moved to the back court.

For a player who had as many rebounds as senior Nicole Ohlde, half of the Wildcats' blocks, one-third of their assists and nearly one-third of their rebounds, the coach has a point.

"What I loved about Megan's game was her offensive board work was so timely and set up big plays for us and helped reacquaint us with how we like to play," Patterson said. "It seemed the ones Megan got her hands on are the ones we made big plays with."

The most memorable of those big plays came with 5:01 left in the game. Mahoney received a pass at the 3-point line, faked to Koehn, and as the two zone defenders bit on the play, Mahoney went to the open basket.

As time wound down, Mahoney, eight seconds from going the full 40 minutes for the first time all year, looked to the student section, raising her arms for them to rise as she pointed to the scoreboard.

"It's a battle every night out in the Big 12 and to get a win, even at home sometimes, is a great feat," she said.

"I just wanted the crowd to get into it and get everyone pumped up. Right now we're in contention for a Big 12 Championship. We just gotta keep fighting and get fired up."

Men's basketball team drops 20th straight conference road game

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team dropped its sixth straight Big 12 road game, losing 62-53 to Missouri Jan. 31.

The loss was the 20th straight for the Wildcats at the Hearnes Center, where K-State has not won since 1985.

Despite holding the Tigers (9-8, 4-3) to just 41 percent shooting from the field, K-State (9-8, 1-5) managed to hit only 34 percent of its shots in the nine-point loss.

"We had some good looks, but we just couldn't knock them down," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

In a defensive, low-scoring first half, both teams used zone defenses to try and slow each other down. At one point, Missouri only hit three of 12 shots after K-State switched to its 2-3 zone defense.

The Wildcats' defense also held the Tigers to 1-11 from behind the 3-point line and were down 27-25 at the half.

"We had opportunities to win the ballgame, but we couldn't hit a shot when we needed it, or a free throw when we needed it," Wooldridge said.

K-State was led by senior guard Jarrett Hart, scoring 12 of his game-high 20 points in the first half.

The Wildcats eventually tied the game at 34 early in the second half, but were quickly down by six as unlikely Missouri heroes Josh Kroenke and Jason Conley hit back-to-back 3-point shots to put the Tigers up by six with 11:51 to go in the second half.

Despite holding senior leaders Arthur Johnson and Rickey Paulding to just 10 combined points in the second half, the Wildcats had no answer for freshman Thomas Gardner.

The Portland, Ore., native hit four 3-pointers and scored 13 of his 16 points in the second half.

"Even though we kept Arthur Johnson in check with the zone, they have

NFL | Elway, Sanders among 4 inducted into Hall

The stirring comeback and spectacular escape were unnecessary this time around. John Elway and Barry Sanders were elected into the Pro Football Hall of Fame without a sweat.

Elway

Sanders

As expected, two of the NFL's most dominating and exciting players made it in Saturday on their first attempt.

Elway, the king of the comeback, and Sanders, the master of escape, cemented their status among the all-time greats, and were joined by Bob Brown and Carl Eller.

Elway played in five Super Bowls, losing the first three then winning two in a row as his 16-year career wound down.

Sanders was the first player to rush for 1,000 yards in his first 10 seasons, leading the league four times. In 1997, he was co-MVP with Brett Favre after rushing for 2,053 yards, only the third player to exceed 2,000 yards in a season. He ran for 100 yards or more in 14 consecutive games.

NFL | Cleveland running back eligible to play next season

Browns running back William Green was reinstated by the NFL, which lifted its indefinite suspension after he completed a treatment program.

Green was suspended for four games in November for violating the league's substance-abuse program. The ban was extended while he got help for drug and alcohol abuse at a facility in Boston.

Green's suspension came after he was charged with drunken driving and marijuana possession on Oct. 27. He has a March 8 court date.

Last week, Green was denied a request to reunite with his fiancee, who is accused of stabbing him. Asia Gray has pleaded innocent to stabbing Green in the back with a steak knife in their home Nov. 19.

Green ran for 559 yards and one touchdown before his suspension. As a rookie, the former Boston College star, rushed for 887 yards — 726 in his final seven games — and helped the Browns make the playoffs.

NASCAR | Broken parts keep racing stars from victory

A broken suspension piece cost NASCAR stars Tony Stewart and Dale Earnhardt Jr. and road racing ace Andy Wallace a victory in the Rolex 24 sports cars endurance race, an event they appeared to have won until the final hour.

Instead of the two Nextel Cup drivers and four-time 24-hours champion Wallace celebrating in the familiar Victory Lane at Daytona International Speedway, it was Andy Pilgrim, Terry Borcheller, Christian Fittipaldi and Forest Barber spraying the champagne Sunday afternoon.

Stewart was at the wheel of the Chevrolet-powered Crawford when the left rear tire pulled off the rim and sent the 2002 Winston Cup champion spinning to a stop on the backstretch, just missing the concrete wall.

Pilgrim drove into the lead with 15 minutes remaining, passing Stewart and the car that had led since late in the seventh hour Saturday night.

CBB | Rhode Island reports 6 possible NCAA violations

The University of Rhode Island has reported six possible rules violations by its men's basketball program to the NCAA.

The school, following an internal investigation which began last March, acknowledged possible violations during the coaching tenures of Jim Harrick and Jerry DeGregorio from 1997-2000. The violations were announced by the school Saturday.

Patriots win 2nd Super Bowl in 3 years

By Dave Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON – Houston, we have a champion.

And once again, the New England Patriots have Adam Vinatieri's foot to thank for a Super Bowl victory.

Vinatieri gave New England its second NFL championship in three seasons with a 41-yard field goal with 4 seconds left for a thrilling 32-29 victory over the Carolina Panthers on Sunday night.

Vinatieri earlier missed a field goal and had another on blocked.

But as he did in 2002 when he kicked the winning field goal to beat St. Louis on the final play of the Super Bowl, he proved he is perhaps the NFL's best clutch kicker.

For a contest that was scoreless for a record 27 minutes; this game was one of the all-time offensive shows between two of the NFL's best defenses.

There were 37 points scored in the fourth quarter alone and Tom Brady, who led New England on its winning drive, was 32-of-48 for 354 yards and three touchdowns.

Brady was voted the MVP for the second time in three years.

However, he did throw an interception that prevented New England from an easy win.

"There have been some heart attacks, but they've come out on top," said coach Bill Belichick.

Carolina had tied the game at 29 with its third fourth-quarter TD on a 12-yard pass from Jake Delhomme to Ricky Proehl with 1:08 left.

Brady moved the Patriots 37 yards in six plays, hitting Deion Branch to set up Vinatieri's winning kick.

"I looked up and it was going right down the middle," he said.

the air. Timberlake said he did not intend to expose Jackson's breast.

"I am sorry that anyone was offended by the wardrobe malfunction during the halftime performance of the Super Bowl," Timberlake said in a statement.

"It was not intentional and is regrettable," Wade said

CBS officials attended rehearsals of the halftime show all week, "and there was no indication any such thing would happen. The moment did not conform to CBS' broadcast standards and we would like to apologize to anyone who was offended."

The Super Bowl halftime show, which also featured P. Diddy, Nelly and Kid Rock, was produced by MTV, CBS' corporate cousin in Viacom.

"We were extremely disappointed by elements of the MTV-produced halftime show," Joe Browne, NFL executive vice president, said.

"They were totally inconsistent with assurances our office was given about the content of the show.

SNOW | Driving in winter weather requires caution

Although she predicts it will stop snowing in Manhattan during the morning hours, Knapp said snow on the roadways could still create mobility problems.

She said it was important for motorists, even those with four-wheel drive, to remember their ability to stop will be limited.

She said pedestrians should take caution as well and avoid stepping out in front of cars as they would in normal conditions.

"Just because someone can see you doesn't mean they'll be able to react as if they would under normal circumstances," she said.

According to www.ksdot.org, the Kansas Department of Transportation's Web site, every road in Riley County was described as snow or ice packed.

Barb Stuart, Riley County Police Department dispatcher, said there were a few minor accidents during the weekend.

"Everyone is just staying in," she said.

Knapp said single digit temperatures will return after the storm had blown through with a possibility of negative temperatures tonight.

She said the higher temperatures that accompanied the snow were due to the storm system tapping into moisture from the Gulf of Mexico. The gulf air warms the atmosphere, leaving a pool of cool air near the Earth's surface.

When the two temperatures deviate too much from each other, the result is moisture that freezes on contact, creating layers of ice.

However, Knapp said, the atmosphere and surface conditions in Manhattan were uniform enough to create snow, which is easier to treat and traverse.

News update
Winter storm warning

- A winter storm warning remains in effect until noon today.
- The warning includes 12 counties including Geary, Riley and Pottawatomie counties.
- Additional accumulations of four to seven inches are possible this morning.
- Additional drifting is possible throughout the day, especially this morning.
- Roads, bridges and overpasses in the warning area will become slick and hazardous, and accumulations of snow will make weather treacherous.

Source: www.weather.com

As the storm moves through the area, it will take the gulf air and warmer temperatures with it.

Arctic air from the upper plains region will replace the gulf air, bringing back the single-digit temperatures.

weapons at every position on the floor," Wooldridge said.

Although Hart scored in double figures for the fourth straight game, he was the only K-State player to do so against Missouri.

"I happen to be the guy who got open at times, but we're still going to have to get more guys scoring the ball," Hart said.

Junior forward Jeremiah Massey had nine points along with senior guard Frank Richards also tallying nine.

"Our inside guys were non-existent. We are not a good enough basketball team to win with just one guy," Wooldridge said.

Bush orders intelligence inquiry

By Deb Riechmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – President Bush, reversing field, said Monday he will order an independent investigation into intelligence failures in Iraq and conferred with former chief weapons inspector David Kay.

"I want to know all the facts," Bush said.

Trying to quiet mounting election-year criticism from Republicans and Democrats alike, Bush confirmed reports that he would establish such an inquiry.

The focus will be not only on the Iraq problem, but also gaps in other areas, such as secretive regimes like Iran and North Korea and stateless groups such as terrorists.

Bush met with Kay at the White House not long after the president shared with reporters his thoughts on the growing controversy surrounding the accuracy of intelligence reports that preceded his decision to go to war against Saddam Hussein.

In the exchange following Bush's meeting with his Cabinet, the president defended his decision to attack based on intelligence that Kay now says was erroneous. Kay has concluded that Iraq did not possess weapons of mass destruction.

"We do know that Saddam Hussein had the intent and capabilities to cause great harm," Bush said. "We know he was a danger. And he was not only a danger to people in the Former student plans to plead not guilty to murder charges

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A former K-State student plans to plead not guilty in the death of her newborn daughter.

Aubrey C. Owen is charged with second-degree murder and will appear in court March 3.

Carl Cornwell, Owen's attorney, would not comment on whether he was attempting to clear Owen of charges or decrease her sentence.

"I'm going to do whatever is necessary to protect her interests," he said.

Chris McMullin, Johnson County assistant district attorney, said if Owen is convicted, she will face between 109 and 493 months in jail.

After 11 inches of snow, roads are mostly clear

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Riley County was hit with 9.5 inches of snow in a 24-hour period, Manhattan city officials said most roads should be clear today.

Gary Fees, city clerk and communications manager for the city of Manhattan, said crews cleared all the main roads during the day Monday as well as most residential roads.

"There may or may not be some residential roads cleared for Tuesday, but driving conditions ought to be pretty good," he said.

Total snowfall in the area was about 11 inches.

Road equipment has been holding up well, and maintenance crews have had enough manpower to keep up, Fees said.

"We have been in pretty good shape," he said.

Troy Hensley, patrol division leader at Riley County Police Department, said there were minor automobile accidents Monday.

"In general, people are being responsible," he said. "I was expecting a tremendous amount more."

He said the RCPD is no longer in Emergency Reporting Phase, when officers respond only to injuries, fatalities or when cars are blocking the road.

If the weather worsens again, they could re-enter the phase, he said.

"It all depends on the number of calls we get," Hensley said.

Balancing comfort with bills

Gas prices high, but easy to reduce

By Oksana Boyko
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With natural gas prices climbing and snow storms moving through Manhattan, the choice between comfortable temperatures and comfortable bills becomes pressing.

But not for Kelly Loub, freshman in anthropology.

Inside
See Page 3 to find out how to get help in paying your heating bills.

A homeowner and a mother of three, Loub knows how to keep her house from turning into a refrigerator at the least possible expense, including making sure window seals are tight and putting a towel against door seams that are letting air in.

Loub said she also reduces thermostat settings at night and makes sure her family wears warm pajamas.

The Topeka Capital-Journal reported that Kansas Gas Service's net gas costs were $6.79 per mcf (a thousand cubic feet) in December, compared with $4.29 in December 2002.

Two other costs on customers' natural gas bills – the service and delivery charges – have risen as well.

That translated into customers paying 58 percent more for natural gas on their December bills than a year ago.

While natural gas prices seem high, they could be worse, Lori Webster, KGS communications manager, said.

To prevent price spikes during winter months, KGS, the largest natural gas provider in the state serving two-thirds of Kansans, purchases most of its gas in advance, Webster said.

"We only buy 20 percent at the current market prices, the rest is

THE NEWSROOM LINK

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

Readers want more Fourum, information

AMY LINK
Amy can be reached at aml7555@k-state.edu

"Fourum sucks."

Many readers have expressed their concerns for the lack of Fourum comments.

Opinion Editor Nasrina Williams said many people think she is responsible for the Fourum being shorter; however, that is not the case.

"I only cut comments that I can't understand or have inappropriate comments in them," Williams said.

The length of the Fourum is determined by the designer of the page, who often is faced with limited space due to longer columns or bigger line art. However, Fourum lovers can rest assured that the full text of the Fourum is always available on the Collegian's Web site, www.kstatecollegian.com.

Readers have also expressed several ways the Collegian could save them the hassles of having to look to other places for information.

One suggestion was for the Collegian to have a Career and Employment section, giving students another source of information aside from Career Employment Services.

A recent K-State graduate said the newspaper could help employment seekers by giving them ideas of how to get a job. Also, having tips on ways to make yourself more marketable would be helpful. It also could be a section for employers to advertise.

Collegian Editor in Chief Katie Lane said this is something she believes could be implemented in the future.

"We are looking into expanding our coverage to include more informative pieces, and this might be a great way to inform students about job opportunities," Lane said.

"We'll definitely look into it."

A must-have for the sports page is a graphic with television and radio listings and information on ticket availability for sporting events, one reader said.

Sports Editor Matt Girard said these were simple adjustments that could be made in order to make sure readers will be able to watch or get to the game.

Along with getting the information quickly, readers also would like stories that relate to them on the front page.

One reader said that because many students are on diets, the Atkins story was a story of interest and that they would like to see more of those.

Giving the readers content that they should be concerned about is the goal of every Collegian staff member, and this is something that will be aimed for in every story that is published.

Any time the staff fails to meet the goal, it is hoped the readers will hold them accountable.

So please, keep the feedback coming.

Groundhog predicts 6 more weeks of winter

Gene J. Puskar | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Punxsutawney Phil, the weather prognosticating groundhog from Gobbler's Knob in Punxsutawney, Pa., is held by handler Bill Deeley as his proclamation of six more weeks of winter weather is read by Groundhog Club member Rusty Johnston, center, with fellow member of the Inner Circle Ron Ploucht looking on after Phil saw his shadow at 7:27 a.m. Monday.

By Dan Nephin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. – If you're tired of winter, Punxsutawney Phil had a message for you Monday – get used to it.

After a rap on an oak stump roused him from his home on Gobbler's Knob, the world's most famous furry forecaster "saw" his shadow this chilly Groundhog Day morning, which according to tradition means six more weeks of winter.

Phil even included a topical reference in his proclamation – to the capture of Saddam Hussein.

"I'm glad I live in this luxurious burrow on the knob, and not in a dirty, smelly, spider hole like a slob," said the proclamation read aloud by one of the organizers.

"When I come out, I don't want to negotiate; but to just do my job and prognosticate."

The prediction drew boos from thousands who gathered in 17-degree weather for the 118th annual festivity run by the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club.

The spirited crowd, some clad in furry groundhog hats or even full-length costumes, chanted "Phil! Phil! Phil!" after fireworks and a long night of rock music drew to an end and the hour of the ceremony neared.

Including Monday's prediction, the groundhog is reported to have seen his shadow 104 times since the tradition began in Punxsutawney.

It is rooted in a German superstition that if a hibernating animal casts a shadow Feb. 2 – the Christian holiday of Candlemas – winter will last another six weeks.

If no shadow is seen, legend says spring will come early.

People from as far away as England descended on this small town to shake the winter doldrums.

What Groundhog Day entails is a lot of revelry, although alcohol has been banned from Gobbler's Knob, the site just outside town where Punxsutawney Phil appears.

KB Toys to close after slow season

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Town Center's KB Toys store will be one of the 375 stores nationwide to close after KB Toys Inc. announced a decision to close a chunk of its 1,300 stores nationwide.

According to a press release issued by KB Toys Inc., the Manhattan store, one of the original stores in Manhattan Town Center, is closing in part due to the impacts of a holiday season price war stemming from major retailers using toys as a "loss-leader."

Major retailers can sell items such as toys at or below cost in order to attract customers to their locations in hopes of the customers purchasing other items during their visit.

Seth Lamborn, assistant manager at the Manhattan location, said the company decided it was not making enough money to maintain daily operations.

"We're not sure how long we will remain open," he said. "Hopefully until around the end of March or the beginning of April."

Lamborn said other closings include Wichita, Salina and the Kansas City area.

Everything in the store is marked up to 40 percent off to clear inventory as soon as possible.

"Sales have been really good since we put up the signs," he said. "We have been really busy."

He said the store management expected to receive at least one more shipment of merchandise before the store closed for good.

"They are trying to clear warehouses and stuff, so we may get some more stuff before it's all said and done," he said.

Lamborn, who has worked at the store for eight months, said employees first heard about the decision to close the store Jan. 26. The store made the information public Jan. 28.

"I'm not really sure what I'm going to do," Lamborn said. "Maybe if I stay around here until they close I'll get something, but I'm not really sure.

"Everything right now is just wait and see," he said. "It's all kind of up in the air."

Derek Christensen, owner of Kidz World toy store, said he was sad to see KB Toys go out of business.

"We had kind of a symbiotic relationship because we had very few cross-over items," Christensen said.

He said only about 5 to 10 percent of his merchandise was also sold at KB Toys.

"We have always maintained a very good relationship with them," he said. "They would send business our way and we would do the same."

Christensen said he did not see the same effects as KB Toys saw from major discounters due to Kidz World's nature as a specialty toy store.

"We do carry some of the same items (as big discounters), but only if we can offer them at the same price as the bigger stores," he said.

Programs available to help with heating costs

By Oksana Boyko
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If winterizing a home looks too expensive, checking into federal programs that offer bill payment assistance and energy-related home repairs, such as Low Income Energy Assistance Program or Weatherization Assistance Program might be a good idea.

By improving the energy efficiency in homes, WAP reduces the burden of energy costs for low-income Americans, especially households with elderly residents or people with disabilities and children.

On average, weatherization reduces heating bills by 31 percent and overall energy bills by $200 to $250 per year.

Larry Bentley, WAP manager, said 13 Riley County homes and apartments were repaired this year to make them more energy efficient.

Statewide, about 900 homes were weatherized with more than 500 others to be completed by April 2004.

"It's looking good," Bentley said about the prospect to complete all planned renovations on time. "We may not be 100 percent done, but surely going to be in high 90s."

Bentley said it usually takes four to seven months from the moment of application approval to the end of work. The longest waiting list is in the Wichita area where it can take up to two years to get a home weatherized.

Although the number of Kansas homes weatherized is increasing each year, this year provides once-in-a-presidential-term opportunity to get a home renovated.

Just a week ago, the U.S. Department of Energy announced President Bush's 2004 budget includes $288 million for WAP, which is $11 million more than the president's fiscal year request. $3.2 of that is reserved for Kansas.

Another program, LIEAP, offers one-time bill payment assistance that ranges from $150 to $350 depending on income level and type of a dwelling unit, said Sandra Petitjean, program officer at Salina office of Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

"Many college students may qualify for our program since student loans are not considered an income source. I would encourage them to apply in their local SRS office," Petitjean said.

Manhattan SRS office will be accepting LIEAP applications for this year's bill payment assistance until March.

Blood supply low; students can donate today

By Stephanie Swoboda
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Winter brings bad news for those in need of blood transfusions.

Hospitals nationwide are being forced to postpone surgeries and ration blood supplies.

Locally, the American Red Cross is in need of type O-negative, said Michelle Wilson, manager of donor recruitment for the Community Blood Center in Topeka.

O-negative is the universal donor, and as of Jan. 27, the supply level of O-negative is at a 1.7 day supply. Wilson said they try to keep a minimum of a two-day supply.

These numbers fall drastically during the winter months.

The blood supply at Mercy is currently sufficient, but Wilson said there is no reason for donations to stop. Blood must be resupplied every 35 days if it is not used.

Blood is used daily by the hospital for many reasons – surgery, types of cancer, gastrointestinal bleeding, low blood count and many other reasons.

Mercy plans to get more donations from upcoming blood drives.

"You are helping someone when you donate, and you never know when you will need it."

TO THE POINT

Judgments on breast exposure were premature

The NFL overreacted when it banned MTV from future Super Bowl halftime shows after Janet Jackson's breast was exposed.

The idea that MTV could lose future halftime show opportunities because of one incident is ridiculous.

Now that Jackson has admitted to planning the stunt with Justin Timberlake during final rehearsals, it's the artists who should be punished.

If the FCC's investigation reveals that neither CBS nor MTV knew of the exposure, they should not be fined for indecency.

Blame must be placed where it belongs, or in the future, media outlets will censor material beyond necessary guidelines.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

How much friggin' sense does it make to clear the friggin' streets on campus if no one can friggin' get to campus?

On behalf of the student body I would like to thank Kappa Sigma for an awesome party on Saturday.

Is it just me or did I just see Janet Jackson's nipple ring on national television?

This is Johnson County, and while everyone was out sleeping I went and bought up all the sleds.

I just saw a naked cowboy snowboarding down the street.

Why hasn't anybody canceled school yet?

Did anybody else see the naked cowboy snowboarding behind a car down on Ratone?

All hail the power of snow!

This is not professional wrestling – there are rules.

The sooner we subvert this simple indicative fact to the level of ideologically taken-for-granted, the sooner we can rid ourselves of the terrible anxiety it causes.

Let me explain.

Of all the relatively harmless platitudes my parents have issued to me in our 23 years together, those that most permanently remain with me have to do with driving.

Ne'er a social outing passed without hearing my mother call to me as I walked out the door: "Watch for deer, son, and for goodness' sake, don't play with the radio in traffic. And buckle up for once in your entire life. And watch for ice on the bridges – you know what happened to Uncle Charlie.

And brake a little sooner because your father and I refuse to replace another bumper. And slow your butt down when you back out of the driveway – you're not Batman; you're a disappointment. And watch out for deer!"

OK, so my mother sounds nothing like that, and I have no Uncle Charlie, but you get the idea.

My life, suffice it to say, has been filled with frequent – one might say incessant – correctives on driving.

Fast-forward to today. Or rather, two Sundays ago.

Having just finished a delicious lunch of Sopa Azteca and cornbread, I sped down Kimball Avenue toward home.

And then it happened – the event I have successfully avoided for more than three years thanks to a combination of paranoia and guile.

I won't say how fast I was driving, since it really isn't relevant. OK, 44 in a 30 mph zone.

I feel I would be remiss if I didn't contend that there are a lot of businesses in this "residential" zone. After all, it was Sunday afternoon, before the return of the students and not a car was in sight (except the policeman who, I should mention, was more than kind to me except the $113 ticket he gave).

After graciously receiving the officer's stern reprimand to "slow down," which still seems a rather redundant statement, having just given me a speeding ticket, I was drawn into the clamor of my own interior monologue.

Somehow the price for the ticket didn't seem to balance my relatively meager transgression. Who determines these amounts, anyway? Why $113 and not $108 or $119? Why didn't the punishment consist of the officer punching me in the arm five times?

Now flash-forward to today. Or rather, several days before you're reading this (isn't this psychedelic time-sorcery awesome?). I paid the ticket this morning, and it was anticlimactic. Walked in. Wrote check. Walked out.

In the intervening weeks between receiving and rectifying the ticket, I have finally silenced the objections in my mind. Even if I had suffered some grievous injustice, what does it matter?

I was speeding. Fragrantly.

And it wasn't the first time, by any means. For every one speeding ticket The Man has slapped on me, I must have committed hundreds of infractions.

The question is whether there is some metaphysical system of justice to which we poor humans are not privy. Has my $113 somehow paid the penalty for the illegal lane changes and rolling stops?

I simply don't know, but I will watch for deer.

News media's censorship undermines democracy

For conservatives and corporate interests, www.moveon.org is the second scariest thing, after Hillary Clinton.

BARBARA MEYER

This nonpartisan advocacy group has a membership of 2.3 million. Its efforts include fighting overtime pay cuts, protesting media consolidation and sponsoring a "Bush in 30 Seconds" advertisement contest.

The winning entry, "Child's Pay," focuses on the massive deficits racked up during the past three years due to tax cuts and increased spending. The ad depicts six children washing dishes and working on assembly lines, simply posing the question "Guess who's going to pay off President Bush's $1 trillion deficit?"

The ad makes its point without the kind of personal attacks and mudslinging displayed in recent campaigns. It simply states a fact supported by the Office of Budget and Management – the deficit is huge and current politicians will be long gone before it body slams today's preschool crowd.

But don't worry if you didn't see it, because it wasn't there.

CBS refused to run the ad, citing its controversial nature and a policy against "advocacy advertising."

I'm pretty sure the existence of a national debt is less controversial than scantily clad women selling beer or the assertion that drug money funds terrorism for that matter.

But let's not discuss Super Bowl ads run by the White House, or the legislation Bush signed last year allowing CBS and Fox News to consolidate and expand their media ownership. And for heaven's sake, let's not even start with why this ad was less appropriate than Janet Jackson's breast.

CBS' decision to stifle MoveOn's message brings a critical issue to the forefront – does the right to speak include the right to be heard?

In this age, when Wal-Mart's gross intake is more than the GDP of most countries, corporations are more powerful than government.

While CBS can't prevent the 2.3 million www.moveon.org members from expressing their anger at massive deficits, they do have the power to keep anyone else from hearing about it.

So if corporations can decide what speech is worthy of being heard, what kind of a right is it?

And who in the world would trust the CEOs of multi-billion dollar companies with their freedom of expression?

The present reality however, demands that we pay attention to the role corporations play in shaping public opinion.

Balanced coverage and fair presentation in the news media are critical to the democratic nature of our government. We cannot rule ourselves effectively if we do not have complete information and access to all viewpoints.

Major news outlets serve as the primary source of news. Votes are cast and elections are won and lost based entirely on information filtered through Fox News and CNN, our modern day kingmakers.

There is a conflict of interest because corporations that own these stations have very specific political agendas. That's why this communications industry contributes a fortune to political campaigns, including $3.3 million to Bush in 2000, according to www.opensecrets.org.

Unfortunately, those agendas don't always include what is good for the American people, hence the need for the minimum wage, worker safety laws and environmental protections. Without these checks, corporations would have imposed a new tyranny on America a century ago.

So when it comes to being fair and balanced, I don't trust news anchors any further than I can throw them, which isn't far at all.

However, the solution to media bias is not legislation.

Promoting free expression is something the American people need to do themselves.

If views other than those of corporations are going to make it to the public, the public will have to make it known that they will not tolerate lopsided censorship from those who guard the floodgates of information.

Whether or not you believe in the Deficit Fairy, MoveOn's quest to communicate their concerns to football fans is one we should all support. Because tomorrow, we could be the ones struggling to be heard.

Making it out alive

Horror movie victims: don't rely on cell phone, always run away from dead bodies

CORBIN H. CRABLE

Although I have a reputation for hating all kinds of movies, there is one genre of which I never tire – no matter how bad the film, I'll watch just about any horror movie you pop into my DVD player.

Since my first horror movie (1995's "Village of the Damned" with Christopher Reeves and Kirstie Alley), I've learned a thing or two about the rules and themes in horror movies.

Yes, the plots and themes are uniform and cliché, but they're my guiltiest of pleasures nonetheless.

Try to remember these rules about horror movies, should you ever find yourself a victim of a chainsaw-wielding maniac or a freak wearing a hockey mask:

1. If you're drinking, smoking, having sex or doing drugs, you can kiss your butt goodbye, because you're about to be slaughtered. It's always the bad, rebellious, slutty kids who get killed first. The good, straight-A virgins will always live to see the sequel. Whether this is an attempt by horror movie screenwriters to be the moral police of America's youth has yet to be seen.

2. If you think you've already killed Freddy Krueger or Jason Voorhees, don't wait around to check, because you'll likely be their next victim. Curious people in horror movies never are able to live to regret their curiosity, because it usually results in their demise. If you think you've killed the antagonist, simply run away from the body. It will give you a small head start on Freddy or Jason, until they slowly get up and proceed to hack you to pieces.

3. In horror movies, authority figures usually are idiots. If you try to approach a police officer when you're being chased by a monster or serial killer, expect him to shake his head and half-heartedly assure you that he'll check it out. After you leave, he'll likely mutter something to the effect of, "Damn kids, smoking the reefer," and then, thankfully, he probably will die a slow, painful death at the hands of your attacker.

4. The next time the creepy, old hermit man with a peg leg and no teeth warns you about the legend of so-and-so, listen to him and don't go hunting out the myth. You'll just regret it when you're running through a forest, bloodied and screaming.

5. If you see children, run away from them. Sure, they might look harmless, but rest assured they have the ability to spin their heads 360 degrees and projectile vomit all over you if you stick around for too long. The same goes for small towns: stopping through a small, deserted town during a road trip will get you nothing but a chainsaw blow to the head or crucifixion by a group of creepy inbred kids.

6. Know that even though the horribly disfigured psychopath is chasing you with a machete and has the powers of hell behind him, he's really just a tortured soul whose mother never hugged him enough when he was a child (after all, most villains weren't born that way; they were created through years of abuse and neglect). Feel free, however, to finally kill him in the end of the movie (be prepared for his return in the sequel, of course).

7. Your cell phone will always die on you just when you're trying to contact said stupid authority figure when you're cornered. Just let it go, since it's nothing but dead weight that will slow you down.

8. Just where do you think you're going to end up when you're running up those stairs in your house? Serial killers and monsters seem to have a superior sense of smell, so no matter where you hide, they'll sniff you out. Besides, when you're cornered in the attic and decide to climb onto the roof of your house and jump off, you'll accomplish nothing but breaking both of your legs.

9. Never, ever make fun of the weird, awkward kid at your school, because she will just end up killing you at the prom. Actually, even if you befriend the kid, she'll find out you're just doing it to make a spectacle of her, so she'll kill you anyway. Sheesh. Just avoid her at all costs. And put down that bucket of pig's blood.

10. You truly can't go home again – expect to be in an insane asylum if you survive your experiences with a horror movie villain. Either that or expect to have flashbacks at the most inopportune moments. You'll have one hell of an excuse when you begin screaming bloody murder in the middle of a crowded lecture hall for no apparent reason.

If you can keep these 10 simple rules in mind, you'll live to see another monster. But if you become yet another victim, don't say I didn't warn you. Mwahahaha!!!!

Patriots need another Super Bowl win to be a dynasty

JOSH WITT

How about that Super Bowl?

Everybody said it would be boring.

Sports writers across the nation whined there was no hype.

And look how it turned out.

Sunday's Super Bowl will go down as one of the best I have ever witnessed, as the New England Patriots somehow squeaked by the Carolina Panthers, 32-29.

What happened to the vaunted Patriot and Panther defenses?

After dominating each other's offenses for the first 27 minutes of the game, the flood gates opened. Defense was non-existent at the end of the first half and again in the fourth quarter, as the two teams combined for 61 points.

The Panthers' defensive line that was supposed to manhandle the Patriots' offensive line, according to many – including Warren "remember when I actually was a good football player" Sapp – gave Tom Brady all day to throw the football, especially in the fourth quarter.

As for the best defense statistically in the NFL, New England allowed Panther quarterback Jake Delhomme to throw for 323 yards.

Speaking of Delhomme, where in the world did that performance come from?

The former NFL Europe backup put the Panthers on his shoulders in the fourth quarter and almost single-handedly pulled out the victory.

Three touchdowns and no interceptions isn't bad for a guy who was only the second non-drafted quarterback to play in the Super Bowl.

Despite their second championship in three years, the Patriots are not a dynasty.

The term "dynasty" should only be applied to the best of the best.

Let me keep this simple.

Would you take this decade's Patriots versus the '70s Steelers, the '80s 49ers or the '90s Cowboys?

Exactly.

The Patriots need one more Super Bowl victory to gain dynasty status and need to win in a more convincing fashion.

Which brings me to another point.

How fortunate have the

Coaches impressed with rowers' work at 8-day training camp in California

By Levi Wolters
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the fall season finished and the spring season just over a month away, the K-State rowing team set out to Palo Alto, Calif., for an eight-day winter training camp.

First-year head coach Patrick Sweeney and head novice coach James Rawson both agreed that the camp was a huge success for the rowers.

"It was a great camp," Rawson said. "It was probably the best I've seen since I've been here."

The coaches found themselves impressed with the effectiveness and fitness the team was able to maintain during the four-week layoff.

"We have been off the water for about a month and a half," Rawson said. "They were effective, and it was a great indicator for the spring."

The training in California gave the rowers a chance to get on the water, which has been difficult to do during the winter in Kansas.

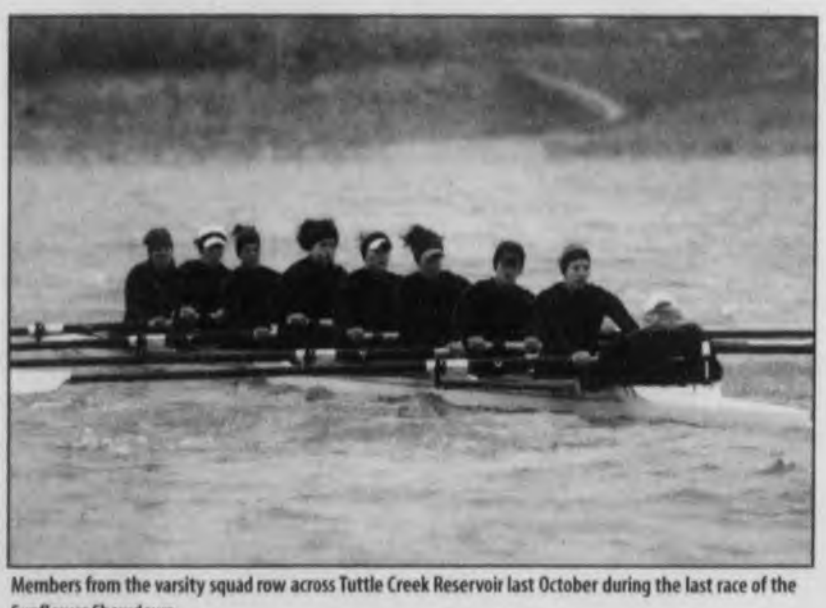
The first session concentrated on an intense workout, followed by a session on technique, and finished up with a distance and endurance work-out.



"It was a good amount of work for eight days," Sweeney said. "It was a very important training for technique. The girls reacted well."

Although training was not concentrated on the novice team specifically, Coach Rawson said he saw something he is hoping to maintain during the spring season.

"The novice was able to step up," Rawson said.

The rowers begin 2004 spring season with a head-to-head regatta against the Creighton Bluejays at Tuttle Creek Reservoir on March 6. It will be the first of three competitions at Tuttle Creek for the Wildcats this spring, including the Big 12 Invitational May 1.

Wallyball rules similar to volleyball, played by young and old

By Matt Stuchlik
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Is it a myth like the Loch Ness monster? Or a legend as old as the pyramids?

Actually, the sport of wallyball is alive and well, but many people who love to play sports are not familiar with it.

The sport of wallyball is new when compared to other sports.

Due to the decline in popularity of racquetball in the late '70s, club owners were desperate to fill the courts again.

Thus the sport of wallyball was conceived.

Wallyball could be described as volleyball with a twist

"It's just like volleyball in a racquetball court. It's usually played in doubles because the courts are smaller because of where they are played," said Steve Martini, associate director of intramural sports at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

"It's easy to pick up on the rules," Jeff Landreth, senior in architectural engineering, said. "I had heard of it, and since I love playing intramural sports, I decided to give it a try. It's a lot of fun."

Many people who love to play volleyball enjoy playing wallyball.

"The ball goes everywhere. You can hit it off the walls and it bounces all over the place. Sometimes it gets a little crazy," Sarah Bono, senior in management, said.

Many of the rules are similar to volleyball. A net is placed halfway across the racquetball court, and like volleyball, players have three hits, bumps or spikes to get the ball over the net.

Getting the ball over, however, is easier said than done, Laramie Bott, senior in management, said.

"This game is a little more challenging because of all the angles you have to judge," he said. "Even the ceiling and back wall are in-bounds, if your own player hits it."

To start the game, a coin is flipped to determine first service or choice of court side.

The second game service always goes to the other team, and if a third game is necessary, the coin is flipped again.

The ball is slightly modified from a volleyball.

"The ball is rubberized, and it is still the same size as a volleyball," Martini said. "I would have to say it is almost like a giant racquetball."

In the past, there have been state and national tournaments. The American Wallyball Association also has hosted many international tournaments.

The excitement of the game also has reeled in many famous people.

Former President George Bush and his son, President George W. Bush, have a history of playing wallyball when they visit Camp David.

Wallyball is for both the young and the old, average joe or celebrities. It continues to rise in popularity for those in the Midwest where winter weather drives them inside to seek for fun and exercise.

MLB | Rodriguez signs contract with Tigers

Ivan Rodriguez finalized his $40 million, four-year contract with the Detroit Tigers on Monday, leaving the World Series champion Florida Marlins to join a team that last year set the American League record for losses.

Rodriguez

The signing of the 10-time All-Star catcher was the latest high-profile move by the Tigers, who went 43-119 last season. Detroit won five of its last six games to avoid tying the post-1900 major league record of 120 losses, set by the 1962 New York Mets.

Rodriguez, a 10-time Gold Glove winner and MVP of the NL championship series, gets $7 million this year, $8 million in 2005 and $11 million each in 2006 and 2007, according to contract information obtained by The Associated Press. The Tigers have a $13 million option for 2008 with a $3 million buyout.

NBA | Kobe out sick for start of 2-day hearing

Kobe Bryant missed a court appearance in his sexual assault case Monday as attorneys argued privately over whether his accuser has waived her right to medical privacy.

Bryant

"Kobe's sick," defense attorney Pamela Mackey told the judge, who opened the two-day hearing without the Los Angeles Lakers star after Bryant waived his right to appear.

Bryant is expected to attend when the hearing resumes Tuesday, said Karen Salaz, state courts spokeswoman. He was in the area Monday, officials said.

Bryant, 25, faces four years to life in prison or 20 years to life on probation if he is convicted of felony sexual assault. He has said he had consensual sex with the employee of the mountain resort near Vail where he was staying last June.

More than 89 million people watched the New England Patriots' last-second Super Bowl victory over the Carolina Panthers, a slight increase over last year's game, CBS said.

Sunday's game drew a 44.2 rating and 63 audience share, based on a sample of 55 major markets provided by Nielsen Media Research. That's up from a 43.8 rating in the same measurement last year.

Tampa Bay's 48-21 victory over Oakland last year was seen by 88.6 million people, according to Nielsen.

More precise Nielsen measurements of the entire country were to be available later Monday. Based on previous years' measurements, CBS chief researcher David Poltrack estimated the viewership would be above 89 million.

CFB | Lawmakers put off investigation against CU

The University of Colorado president agreed to form an independent commission to look into allegations that the school uses sex to recruit football players, lawmakers said Monday.

Hoffman

State Sens. Peter Groff and Dan Grossman met with university President Elizabeth Hoffman and agreed to delay plans for a special legislative investigation, which could include subpoena powers.

Groff said the panel should include recruiters and athletes, lawyers and a representative from a rape crisis support group.

The co-chairs, to be appointed by Hoffman, are to pick the rest of the members.

Groff, however, said the panel will not focus on current cases pending in court, including lawsuits in which three women say they were raped at or following a December 2001 party for football recruits.

free world, he was a danger to his own people. He slaughtered thousands of people, imprisoned people."

"What we don't know yet is (reconciling) what we thought and what the Iraqi Survey Group has found, and we want to look at that," the president said. "But we also want to look at our war against proliferation and weapons of mass destruction, kind of in a broader context. And so, I'm putting together an independent, bipartisan commission to analyze where we stand, what we can do better as we fight this war against terror."

Kay threw the administration's rationale for war in Iraq into doubt with his determination that Saddam did not have the weapons of mass destruction that the United States had insisted he possessed.

Kay told Congress last week that "it turns out we were all wrong, probably" about the Iraqi threat.

The president did not set a timetable for the investigation to report its findings, and he sidestepped a question about whether the country was owed an explanation before the November elections.

But his chief spokesman, Scott McClellan, told reporters that Bush will announce members of the commission and its timeline for completion later this week.

With the election exactly nine months away, McClellan said: "It is important that the commission's work is done in a way that it doesn't become embroiled in partisan politics."

He said Bush summoned Kay to the White House for lunch to "hear what he has learned and get his views."

Bush's decision to go to an outside commission comes amid assertions that America's credibility is being undermined by uncertainty over flawed intelligence used as a basis for invading Iraq.

He initially reacted coolly to setting up such a body, then decided during the weekend to go forward. By establishing the commission himself, Bush will have greater control over its membership and mandate.

A senior White House official discussing the situation on grounds of anonymity said the body would be patterned after the Warren Commission, which conducted a 10-month investigation that concluded in 1964 that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in killing President Kennedy.

If you find that you are stuck, do not spin your tires.

Instead, place some salt or a piece of rubber material underneath the tires so you can drive out with ease.

2. MAINTAIN A STEADY SPEED

Always make sure you drive at a steady speed.

Do not suddenly accelerate because this can be dangerous and cause skidding.

Take your time and drive slowly so you can avoid an accident.

3. AVOID HEAVY SNOW

If the snow is steadily coming down, then pull into a safe location and wait for it to stop or ease up.

This will allow road crews to do their jobs.

4. STOPPING ON ICE AND SNOW TAKES TIME

Remember, it takes longer to stop on snowy, ice-covered roads.

Allow five car-lengths between you and other vehicles so you can stop in case of an accident.

This will allow you greater time to respond to potential problems.

5. SKIDDING

If you are skidding in a front, or rear-wheel drive vehicle, first disengage the clutch or shift to neutral and steer into the skid.

This will cause the vehicle to straighten and stop skidding.

Just before you come out of the skid, turn the wheel the other way until you are going in the right direction again.

Jackson's halftime performance takes shock to new level

By Nekesa Mumbimoody
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Suddenly, Britney and Madonna's smoochfest seems G-rated.

Janet Jackson's boobylicious performance with Justin Timberlake at the Super Bowl halftime show on Sunday has sparked a federal investigation and set new standards for raunch in an entertainment industry that seems to be setting new highs – or lows – every day.

When Timberlake snatched off part of Jackson's bustier, revealing a breast clad only in a sun-shaped "nipple shield," the barrier was not broken, it was shattered before 89 million viewers.

In a statement released Monday night, Jackson apologized and said it was a last-minute stunt that went awry.

"The decision to have a costume reveal at the end of my halftime show performance was made after final rehearsals. MTV was completely unaware of it," she said. "It was not my intention that it go as far as it did. I apologize to anyone offended – including the audience, MTV, CBS and the NFL."

Jackson's official Web site was bombarded with angry postings. Her spokeswoman, Jennifer Holiner, said a red lace garment was supposed to remain when Timberlake tore off the outer covering.

Holiner said she was not sure whether Jackson's medieval-looking nipple decoration was meant to be seen.

Although Timberlake issued a statement shortly after the show blaming the debacle on a "wardrobe malfunction," in comments to the syndicated show "Access Hollywood" right after the incident, he didn't seem too sorry.

"Hey man, we love giving you all something to talk about," he said, laughing.

Federal Communications Commission chief Michael Powell said in a statement, "Like millions of Americans, my family and I gathered around the television for a celebration. Instead, that celebration was tainted by a classless, crass and deplorable stunt."

The FCC ordered an immediate investigation of the Super Bowl halftime show Monday. Powell said potential fines could reach to $27,500. If applied to each CBS station, the fine could reach the millions.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue called the conduct "offensive, embarrassing to us and our fans, and inappropriate."

"We will change our policies, our people and our processes before the next Super Bowl to ensure that this entertainment is far more effectively dealt with," he said.

Joe Browne, NFL executive vice president, said earlier that it was "unlikely that MTV will produce another Super Bowl halftime."

GAS PRICES | As heating bills increase, thermostats can be reduced purchased in advance," Webster said.

This strategy was designed to financially ease Kansans' high reliance on natural gas during cold months.

According to the 1997 census, 77 percent of all households in the Midwest used natural gas as their main heating fuel.

Out of 84,000 cubic feet used annually by an average Kansan, 65,000 are burnt up during the heating season, which lasts from November to March, Webster said.

Webster said some conservation measures, including those employed by Loub, can be effective in cutting heating expenses.

For example, she said, reducing air leaks could save as much as 10 percent on an energy bill.

The U.S. Department of Energy recommends checking the most common places where air escapes, such as floors, walls and ceilings.

These areas are responsible for 31 percent of warm-air loss. Ducts are responsible for 15 percent of warm-air loss and fireplaces are responsible for 14 percent.

Fast facts

Money-saving tips for heating your home

- Reduce normal thermostat setting to 68 degrees.
- Install a programmable thermostat.
- Change the furnace filter.
- Have the furnace cleaned and tuned.
- Let the sun shine in south windows during the day.
- Check and replace weather stripping on doors and windows.
- Close storm windows and doors.
- Operate kitchen and bath vents minimally.
- Lower the thermostat set point on the water heater (it should not be higher than 125 F).
- Install a water heater.
- Reduce hot water use (one good way is to take showers instead of baths).

Patriots been in their two championship seasons?

The obscure and absolutely ridiculous "tuck rule" play in the 2002 Divisional Round – aka the worst day of my life – was all that prevented the Oakland Raiders from moving on in those playoffs instead of New England.

Then, in this year's Super Bowl win, Carolina kicker John Kasay booted the ball out of bounds after the Panthers tied the game at 29-29.

The kick by Kasay gave New England quarterback Tom Brady and his team great field position at their own 40 yard line, setting up an easy short drive to get into field goal range.

If the Patriots had started on their own 20 instead, the outcome of the game could have been much different.

Tom Brady is not Joe Montana.

A good quarterback Brady is. Montana he is not.

Ohlde, Wecker selected for midseason Wooden Award list

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Here is the list that was checked to nominate the 20 players selected to the first-ever Midseason All-American Team for the Women's Wooden Award, which included K-State's Nicole Ohlde and Kendra Wecker:

■ Candidates must be full-time students in an accredited NCAA college or university.

That was too easy.

■ Consideration should be given to scholastic achievement and aspirations.

Ohlde is an elementary education major and has been on the Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll six times. Wecker wants to be a broadcaster someday and was First-Team Academic All-Big 12 last season.

■ All candidates must have a cumulative 2.00 grade point average since enrolling in their current university.

See preceding paragraphs. They could probably average a 2.00 with their eyes closed.

■ Candidates must exhibit strength of character, both on and off the court.

Their work on the court has been well-documented, to see their strength of character off the court, look at all school-aged girls in the stands with Nos. 3 and 53 uniforms or after the game as those very girls take the court in hopes of a high-five or an autograph.

■ Candidates should be those who contribute to team effort.

How about leading a team to 15-3 overall record and a No. 12 national ranking.

■ Candidates must excel in both offense and defense.

A combined 69 double-doubles between the two in their careers including 13 this season.

■ Candidates should be considered on their performance over the course of the entire season (pre-conference, conference and tournament play).

If the latter half is anything like the first half, look for Ohlde and Wecker to be in Los Angeles on April 10.

Consisting of 20 players who have the potential to make a run at this year's player of the year awards, the list for the Women's Wooden Award includes names like Diana Taurasi from Connecticut, Kelly Mazzante from Penn State and Alana Beard from Duke.

K-State and Texas are the only two teams to have two candidates qualify.

The Big 12 and SEC got the most nominations with five players from each conference.

Iowa State struggles with offense

Cyclones to face Wildcat women; 3-point shooting crucial for ISU

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will take its No. 12 ranking and two-game winning streak on the road to Ames, Iowa, on Wednesday when the Wildcats face the Iowa State Cyclones.

K-State has won 13 of its last 14 games and is coming off a 74-65 win over No. 20 Oklahoma on Saturday.

The Wildcats stand at 15-3 overall and 6-1 in Big 12 play.

Iowa State improved to 10-8 overall and 3-4 in the Big 12 after the Cyclones defeated Texas A&M, 66-58, Saturday night.

Iowa State coach Bill Fennelly earned his 350th career victory and the Cyclones captured their first road win of the season, despite a 40-29 rebounding deficit.

In the game, Iowa State used its 10th different starting lineup of the season and its third unique combination in the past three contests.

When Iowa State wins, the team averages 76.8 points per game. The team relies on the long ball and makes 39.3 percent of its 3-point field goal attempts in ISU wins this season.

However, when the Cyclones lose, the offense manages only 54.1 points and shoots 29.6 percent from behind the arc.

K-State will look to take away the outside shot from Iowa State Wednesday night.

About 34 percent of ISU's shots are from 3-point territory.

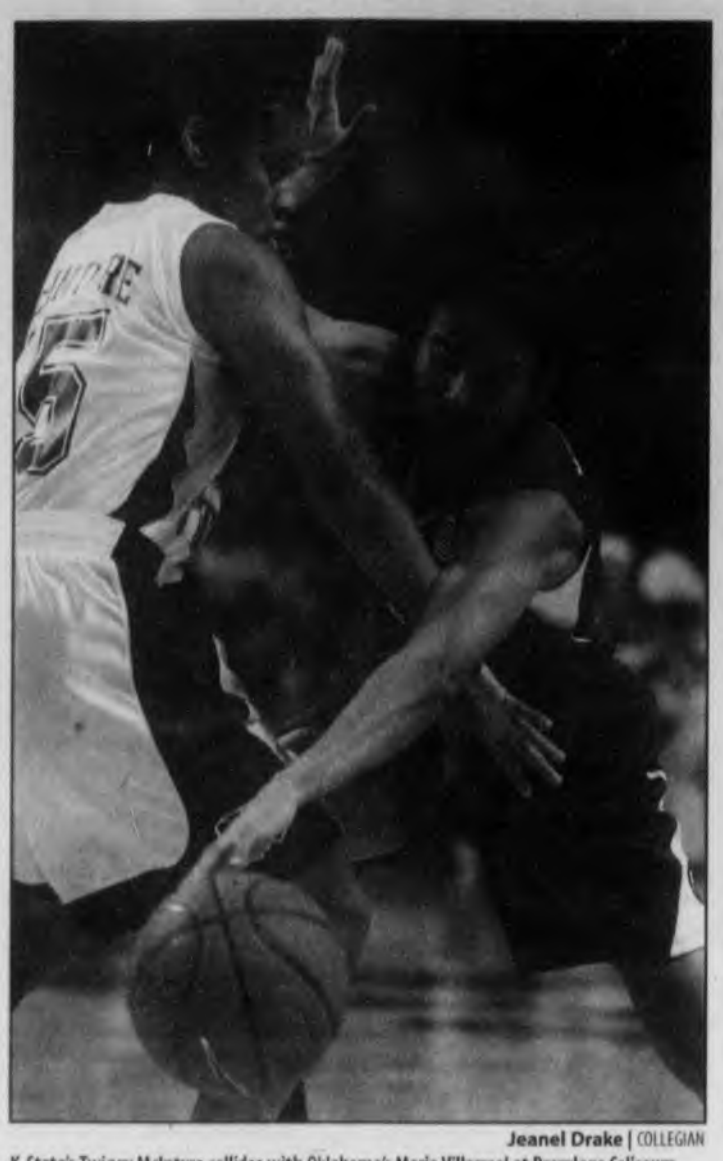
Of the nine Cyclones who see action every game, only one has not made a 3-pointer this season, and all nine have attempted at least five from downtown.

Offensive balance has been a problem for the Cyclones this season as well.

Four Iowa State players average double-digit scoring in games won, while ISU has just one player scoring in double figures in losses.

Iowa State is led by Anne O'Neil, Brittany Wilkins, and Lisa Kriener.

O'Neil, a 5-11 junior guard, is the Cyclones leading scorer averaging 13.6 points and 4.1 rebounds per game.



Kriener, a 6-2 forward/center, has been a solid inside force for the Cyclones.

The junior has averaged 8.5 points and leads the team in rebounding by averaging 5.1 boards per game.

The 6-3 forward/center is second on the team in scoring and rebounding by averaging 9 points and 5 rebounds per game.

The Cyclones are 7-2 at home this season and 2-1 when hosting conference games.

Men look to get back on track against struggling Husker team

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The basketball rivalry between K-State and its neighbors from the north may not be as big as the football rivalry, but it's still Nebraska.

On Wednesday, the Cornhuskers (11-6, 1-5) come to Bramlage Coliseum riding a two-game losing streak, including a heart-breaking two-point loss at home to No. 25 Oklahoma, on Sunday.

"There is only one kind of loss, and that's the one that stinks," Nebraska Coach Barry Collier said after the loss.

The Wildcats (9-8, 1-5), on a two-game losing streak of their own, are looking to bounce back after losing to Missouri on Saturday.

Although K-State split with Nebraska in its two meetings last season, the Wildcats will try to avenge their seven-point loss at the Bob Devaney Sports Center in 2003.

K-State will rely on senior guard Jarrett Hart, who scored a career-high 20 points against Missouri, but the Wildcats will need to have more than one person in double figures to down the Huskers.

"We're still going to have to get more guys scoring the ball," Hart said.

Junior forward Jeremiah Massey leads K-State in scoring, averaging 12.9 points per game, but only managed nine points against Missouri.

The team's second-leading scorer, senior guard Tim Ellis, also had trouble finding the basket, registering four points in the loss.

Coach Patterson proud of Bramlage atmosphere

Wildcat women yet to be defeated on home court, which ranks 7th nationally in attendance

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Duke has its Crazies, Virginia has its 'Hooville, and more than 14,000 show up on an average day to watch Connecticut.

Coach Deb Patterson is familiar with some of the best places across the country to play basketball but said she wouldn't trade the environment in Manhattan for anything.

"What makes Bramlage a tough place to play is our fans," she said. "They are unbelievably active. First and foremost, they're present. Secondly, they're active, they're loud, they're noisy and our team connects with our fans. They feed off the emotion and the noise."

Dubbed the "Sixth Man" by PA announcer Matt Walters, K-State fans have helped their team stay unbeaten at home this season, where the Cats are 9-0.

In fact, since the start of the 2001 season, only three losses have occurred in the Purple Palace.

In regular-season games in Bramlage, K-State has now won 28 consecutive contests.

Deb Patterson
WOMEN'S COACH

"Practicing in Bramlage is one thing," she said. "Playing in there is quite another. Our fans are incredible. It was an awesome atmosphere."

K-State ranks seventh in the country in attendance, averaging 8,676 fans per game.

But, Patterson said, there is more to it than just figures.

"You can have full arenas that are very observational and watching what's happening," she said. "And then you can have fans like we have here in Bramlage that are literally impacting our game and changing the emotion and momentum of the game. It's a huge home-court advantage because of it."

The greater the crowd involvement in the game, the greater the connection between those who are in the action and those who are watching it, Patterson said.

"When Megan Mahoney and Nicole Ohlde and Kendra Wecker are flying around out there and raising hands it's like 'you're right there with us' and you feel that dynamic as coach and as a player in our program. It's so exciting."

K-State's Nicole Ohlde and Amy Dutmer defend Oklahoma's Beky Preston during the first half Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats have not lost a regular season game at Bramlage in more than a season and a half.

Kelly Glasscock
COLLEGIAN

More than 8,240 people rose up in response.

"We were pumped up to go out there and get after it," she said. "I was just trying to get the crowd into it. Our crowd responded tonight, and it's exciting when they get loud. Speaking from experience, when crowds get loud on the road it's hard, so it was definitely a factor."

The next home action for K-State where the Sixth Man will be on display for the nation to see as the Cats take on Colorado on ESPN2 at 3 p.m. Sunday.

"It's rare and not a lot of people get to experience it, but we do here in Manhattan," Patterson said. "It's special, it's electric, it's wonderful."

Big 12 race still up for grabs

K-State women to be tested against Iowa State

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Much like their male counterparts, the race for the regular season Big 12 women's conference title is wide open.

Texas, Colorado, K-State and Texas Tech all are neck-and-neck in the battle for first place, while the squads from Baylor and Nebraska also could have a say in how things shake down in March.

WHO'S HOT?

Colorado: The Colorado women (17-2, 6-1) have been on a roll since a Jan. 10 loss at home against K-State. On Saturday, the Buffaloes edged out the Missouri Tigers (11-7, 2-5), 68-66.

However - despite being winners of five straight–none of those games were against ranked opponents. This week Colorado will play Nebraska (14-4, 4-3) at home Wednesday and then travel to Manhattan on Sunday to face K-State.

K-State: That Jan. 24 blowout loss at the hands of the Nebraska Cornhuskers (14-4, 4-3) is looking more and more like a deviation from normal for the Wildcats (15-3, 6-1).

Last week, K-State rolled over two ranked opponents – Baylor (16-4, 4-3) and Oklahoma – in convincing fashion at home. On Wednesday, the Wildcats will be tested on the road at Iowa State (9-8, 2-4) before their weekend clash with the streaking Buffaloes.

Zach Long | COLLEGIAN

Oklahoma's Beky Preston works around K-State's Nicole Ohlde at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday. The Sooners have lost four consecutive games and find themselves in the bottom half of the Big 12 Conference standings.

Texas: With Sunday's huge win against arch-rival Texas Tech (18-3, 4-3), the Longhorns (19-2, 7-1) should be riding high going into this week's action. On Tuesday, Coach Jody Conradt's squad hosts the Missouri Tigers, and Saturday the Longhorns will battle Oklahoma State (8-10, 3-4).

WHO'S NOT?

Oklahoma: Sooner fortunes have gone downhill in a hurry. Oklahoma (13-6, 3-5) has lost its last four, dropping out of the national rankings. On Wednesday, the Sooners should get a bit of a break when they play Texas A&M.

Texas A&M: Speaking of A&M, it has not been a good year to be an Aggie.

Texas A&M (7-12, 0-8) fell again Saturday to Iowa State (9-8, 2-4).

"We're tired of losing and we're tired of making excuses," Coach Gary Blair said. "We've got to get the job done."

The Aggies have come close, but they have yet to notch their first conference victory. Fans from College Station hope that this is their week, as the Aggies host Oklahoma State on Wednesday and travel to Norman, Okla. to face the Sooners on Saturday.

In other news around the conference, Saturday the Kansas Jayhawks (9-9, 2-5) broke a four-game slide at home against Oklahoma State (8-10, 3-4). The victory was especially important as the Jayhawks were forced to play without their head coach Marian Washington who is on indefinite medical leave.

"Our players stepped up today," she said.

"We took the energy, the love and the togetherness that we had onto the court with us tonight."

Upsets complicate Big 12 race

Oklahoma State men on a roll, share lead with Kansas, Texas

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last weekend's men's college basketball action saw numerous upsets all over the country, and the Big 12 was no different.

Not only did Oklahoma State pull a minor upset over the once red-hot Texas Tech Red Raiders, but Kansas was dethroned as the lone conference unbeaten by Iowa State.

Kansas' Wayne Simien works against K-State's Dramane Diarra at Bramlage Coliseum. The Jayhawks find themselves in a tie for first place in the conference with Oklahoma State and Texas after a loss to Iowa State on Saturday in Ames.

Zach Long | COLLEGIAN

WHO'S HOT?

Iowa State: Just 10 days ago, Iowa State (13-4, 4-2) was reeling after an embarrassing loss to Baylor (6-13, 1-5).

Now, the Cyclones must feel like they're on the top of the world after Saturday's upset of the Kansas Jayhawks at home.

The victory not only helps the process of wiping out the memory of ex-coach Larry Eustachy, but also could be very crucial come NCAA tournament team selection time.

Iowa State faces two tough tests this week – Wednesday at Oklahoma and Saturday versus Oklahoma State.

Oklahoma: Maybe it isn't time to throw in the towel yet in Norman.

The Sooners (13-4, 3-3) have countered a four-game losing streak with three straight wins – the last one on the road at Nebraska.

Despite being without the services of sophomore postman Kevin Bookout for the rest of the year, Coach Kelvin Sampson's crew still looks like a force to be reckoned with during the second half of the conference season.

On Wednesday, the Sooners get Iowa State at home, and then Sunday travel to Austin to face the hated Texas Longhorns (14-3, 5-1).

Oklahoma State: No team in the conference is as hot as the Cowboys (15-2, 5-1).

Last week, Oklahoma State earned impressive victories at Texas and at home against Texas Tech.

The Cowboys have won five straight games and now share the conference lead with Kansas (13-4, 5-1) and Texas.

This week's conference slate includes a Tuesday trip to Texas A&M and Saturday's face-off at Iowa State.

WHO'S NOT?

Kansas State: The Wildcats (9-8, 1-5) cannot seem to get over the hump.

Coach Jim Wooldridge's squad still is searching for consistency on the offensive end, and in the process has dropped its last three games.

Hopes are high that the return of highly touted freshmen Dez Willingham and Cartier Martin will jump-start an offense that has yet to match the solid play the Wildcats showcase on the defensive end of the floor.

On Wednesday, the Wildcats play Nebraska at home and then Saturday go to Colorado to battle the Buffaloes (12-6, 4-3).

Nebraska: A 10-1 nonconference record has yet to translate into success inside the Big 12 for the Cornhuskers (11-6, 1-5).

Nebraska's lone win in the conference was against Baylor, though the Cornhuskers came within one bucket of knocking off Texas in mid-January.

Nebraska hopes to snap its two-game losing skid this week, as they visit K-State on Wednesday and Missouri (9-8, 4-3) in Lincoln on Saturday.

Texas A&M: Victories have been hard to come by for the Aggies (7-10, 0-6).

A&M has lost all six of its conference games – each time by 10 points or less. Things do not get any easier for A&M coach Melvin Watkins, as Tuesday the Aggies encounter a red-hot Oklahoma State team.

Texas Tech: It's only a two-game slide, but last week did bring the Red Raiders (16-4, 4-2) back to earth.

After starting conference play 4-0, Tech has dropped two tight games in a row – at home to Texas and at Oklahoma State.

This week, Tech coach Bobby Knight will draw up the X's and O's on Wednesday against Baylor at home and Saturday on the road at Kansas.

In other notes from around the conference, Texas Tech senior guard Andre Emmett has been named Big 12 Player of the Week five times this year.

Not even halfway through the conference season, Emmett has accumulated that honor more times than any other player in Big 12 history for one season.

Colorado looking for revenge Sunday

Buffs attempt to beat Wildcat women after loss earlier in season

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildcat fans should expect a battle between K-State center Nicole Ohlde and Colorado senior All-American candidate Tera Bjorklund.

K-State will attempt to extend its home winning streak to 29 on Sunday when the No. 11 Colorado Buffaloes (17-2, 6-1) come to town for a 3 p.m. tipoff at Bramlage Coliseum.

Revenge will be on the mind of the Buffs.

K-State won the previous meeting, 76-69, Jan. 10 at Boulder.

The loss was only the second of the year for Colorado, and the team's only loss in the Big 12.

The Wildcat forward had 23 points and 11 rebounds and hit three key baskets down the stretch to secure the win for K-State.

Since the loss, CU has rattled off five straight victories, including a 68-66 win over Missouri on Saturday.

The Buffs have relied on senior leadership and the team's experienced backcourt this season.

Colorado has three returning starters from the 2003 Sweet 16 team, two of which are at the guard spots.

Seniors Kate Fagan and Maria Billingsley provide knowledge and confidence for CU's backcourt. Fagan is the team's second-leading scorer, averaging 14.3 points and leads the team in assists.

The 5-8 guard is Colorado's third leading scorer, averaging 9.8 points per game, and has been deadly from behind the arc, connecting on 42 of 83 3-pointers (.506) this season.

Bjorklund, a 6-5 senior from St. Peter, Minn., is averaging 19.3 points and 7.7 rebounds per game.

Colorado has averaged 74.6 points an outing, compared to the 62.1 points the team gives up to opponents, and has been strong on the boards, hauling down 35.7 a game this season.

The Buffs lead the all-time series 29-22.

However, K-State swept Colorado last season and are on a three-game winning streak versus CU.

The 2,000-point club

Kelly Glassocok | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Nicole Ohlde is congratulated by her teammates after K-State's 74-65 win, where she became the first K-State women's basketball player to score 2,000 points in her career. Ohlde was the leading scorer in the game with 27 points.

Ohlde close to breaking all-time Big 12 women's scoring record

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This was not just any accomplishment – it stood out from the rest a little bit more.

Only three other females in Big 12 history had ever scored 2,000 points.

Only one other person, male or female, at K-State had ever done it.

With 14:17 to go in the game on Saturday, a layup catapulted senior center Nicole Ohlde into the 2,000-point club.

For those who do not understand the significance of this achievement, they only need to look at Ohlde's company in this club at K-State: Mike Evans (1975-1978).

That's it.

In the long history of Wildcat basketball, Jan. 31 was only the second time in school history anyone had scored 2,000 points.

"It's an absolutely phenomenal achievement," Coach Deb Patterson said. "In the women's game and in a league like this, when you become a 2,000-point scorer you've distinguished yourself as one of the best to ever play the collegiate game."

After the game, Ohlde was a lot more excited about the fact that her play helped her team earn another win.

How about a celebration in honor of this feat?

"I think I'd order a cake to the fact that we won and we got another win," she said.

Call it simple, humble or unselfish, but that attitude is exactly what Patterson loves about No. 3.

"It's a tribute to her, and it's also a tribute to her teammates," Patterson said.

"They have helped her achieve this. Whether by virtue of assists or what they bring to the floor, it's always a team achievement as well, and one of the things that makes Nicole really special is she'd be the first one to acknowledge that."

Ohlde is now 106 points from Evans' K-State record and 178 from the Big 12 record for women.

Her 27 points against the Sooners was the 41st time in her career she had scored 20 or more points in a game.

"We are year in and year out as tough a league as any," Patterson said. "It's a real compliment to her consistency and her intensity. Her commitment to improving and not staying the same. And we've still got a lot of season left."

Plenty of season to go means plenty more accolades to achieve and records to break, which will only cement Ohlde's contributions to Wildcat basketball, Patterson said.

"She's been an absolutely phenomenal factor in the evolution of not just this team but this program and its history," she said. "I don't think anyone would argue that she's had as big an impact as anybody in Kansas State women's basketball history."

Colorado men improving at home with 5 straight victories

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Coors Event Center has become "home, sweet home" lately for the Colorado Buffaloes.

After losing three home games in a row early in the season, the Buffaloes (12-6, 4-3) have bounced back at home, winning their last five at Boulder.

In the past two home games against conference foes Missouri and Baylor, senior guard Michel Morandis and junior center David Harrison have combined for 97 points.

In the Buffaloes' 15-point win against Baylor, on Jan. 31, Harrison was a perfect 10-for-10 from the field.

"I was hitting my shots. I have been making my shots through and around contact in the last two games," Harrison said.

Harrison said his team is coming together despite three conference losses.

"We are clicking right now, and it is the best time to click coming into the end of the season," Harrison said.

The Buffaloes are averaging 84 points per game in their five-game home winning streak and are 4-0 when scoring 80 points or more on the season.

Coach Ricardo Patton said the play needs to improve.

"We have just got to stay focused and get better on this home stretch," Patton said.

K-State will travel to Boulder on Saturday to try to snap a 19-game conference road losing streak that goes back to 2001.

Kansas' Michael Lee blocks K-State's Tim Ellis as he attempts a jumper at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats will try to break a 20-game conference road losing streak when they play Colorado on Saturday.

Freshman battling frustrations in 1st season

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Take a talented freshman, add high expectations, a suspension and an injury, and throw in being one-half of, what some might say, the future of K-State basketball.

What do you get?

Freshman forward Cartier Martin.

Martin, who made his return to the lineup during the KU game Wednesday, has had a frustrating start to his career.

An ankle injury forced him to miss five games, and he was suspended for three games after receiving an improper benefit from a family friend while he was still in high school.

Despite having limited action, Martin has shown he is a scoring threat. He has scored in double figures in four of the nine games he has played.

Although he only played eight minutes in his return, Coach Jim Wooldridge said Martin is a player with a lot to offer.

"He can give us a lot of things. One would be some more scoring and rebounding, and he ought to be able to give us some more minutes," Wooldridge said.

"It was hard to watch from the bench," Martin said. "I wanted to come in and contribute, but my injury held me back."

Senior Tim Ellis said he was just happy to see Martin back.

"It was good to see him get back out there in the action," Ellis said.

Against Missouri, on Jan. 31, Martin got more playing time but still seemed to be looking for his shooting touch. He was 1-of-7 from the field and had only three points in 20 minutes.

Although he is available to play, Wooldridge said the team will be careful with the injury.

"I've been told that we need to be careful with this right now. He's got to get more battle tested again," Wooldridge said.

Martin said he knew it would take time to get healthy.

"I didn't want to re-injure it and sit out for a longer period of time," Martin said. "I've been getting treatment everyday, and our trainers do a good job doing what they do."

Cats losing focus

Poor shooting, numerous turnovers, plague Wildcat men

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the Wildcat men, it's too bad "almost" doesn't count.

Throughout the many losses that have made up the Wildcats 1-5 conference start, K-State has shown signs of promise and has excelled in certain aspects of the game.

But the losses keep stacking up, as the Wildcats search for a complete game on both sides of the ball.

The Wildcats' problems have centered on an offense that has scored only 61 points per game in conference play.

"I thought we did a good job in some areas, but we weren't able to score the ball," Coach Jim Wooldridge said following Saturday's 62-53 loss to Missouri.

While the defense has been one of the best in the Big 12, points have been hard to come by for the Wildcats. Turnovers also have been an issue in several of the conference losses.

In a Jan. 24 loss to Oklahoma, K-State debilitated itself with 21 turnovers and lost 61-49 despite a good defensive showing .

A whopping 25 turnovers plagued the Wildcats in their 57-56 loss at home to Oklahoma State. Poor handling of the basketball was a deciding factor in the loss – one in which the Cats held a double-digit lead for most of the game.

Following that game, Wooldridge said he was taken aback by the amount of turnovers.

"They are from lack of concentration and loss of confidence," Wooldridge said.

"Frustrating is the best word for it," Thomas said.

"It wasn't just one person. Everyone made a mistake here or there, and it just added up."

Despite the lack of scoring, the blame for the Wildcats' slide should not rest solely on the offense's shoulders.

Though usually sound, K-State's defense has been prone to lapses at critical times in the game.

In the second frame of the OSU game, after a good first half, the defense allowed the Cowboys to shoot 50 percent from the field.

On Saturday at Missouri, K-State defenders were caught napping at the beginning of the second half as well.

The Tigers got two quick and easy layups to begin the half, giving them considerable momentum.

"If we're going to win on the road, you can't start the second half in a two-point game giving two layups away," Wooldridge said.

As the Wildcats prepare for Wednesday night's home game against Nebraska, Wooldridge feels that the season has been an ongoing learning process for his players.

"We're literally teaching from the ground up with our team," Wooldridge said.

AWARD

Ohlde, Wecker nominated for Wooden Award

The list will be narrowed to 15 players in March and in April, the top five nominees will be flown to Los Angeles for the awards ceremony, which will include the Wooden Award All-American Team, the inaugural Women's Wooden Award and the Legends of Coaching Award.

Finalists will also receive contributions from the John R. Wooden Award Scholarship Fund.

"Each of these 20 players has had an enormous impact on her respective team's season and deserves to be recognized," said Mike Solum, director of the John R. Wooden Award.

Although she has been playing hurt in recent games, Wecker's determination and will to keep playing make her a worthy nomination, Coach Deb Patterson said.

"What we're seeing with Kendra the last couple of games is an absolute gladiator mentality," Patterson said. "She's fighting hard and competing in pain. She is finding a way to impact the game. She's playing like an All-American."

Ohlde and Wecker were also preseason candidates for the Naismith National Player of the Year Award.

K-State's Kendra Wecker works against Oklahoma's Dionnah Jackson on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. Wecker, along with teammate Nicole Ohlde, is on numerous award watch lists.

"I thought we did a good job in some areas, but we weren't able to score the ball. We just didn't have enough offense to get caught up or go ahead," Wooldridge said.

Nebraska is led by seniors Nate Johnson and Andrew Drevo, who are averaging 11.9 and 10.7 points per game, respectively.

The duo combined for 56 points against the Wildcats last season.

The Wildcats also will have the task of bottling up the Big 12's leading 3-point shooter, senior forward Brian Conklin.

Conklin is averaging 55.6 percent from behind the 3-point arc this season.

" K-State leads the all-time series, 116-88, and has won its last three home meetings against rival Nebraska."

In the two 2003 games, K-State held the Huskers' 6-11 sharp shooter to only five attempts from the three-point line, missing all five.

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., addresses the crowd Tuesday night in Seattle. Kerry said his showing in Tuesday's Democratic presidential primary voting across seven states shows he is the candidate who can defeat President Bush.

Kerry emerges as leader, wins 5 states

By Ron Fournier

Democratic presidential front-runner John Kerry rolled up big victories and a pile of delegates in five states Tuesday night, while rivals John Edwards and Wesley Clark kept their candidacies alive with singular triumphs in a dramatic cross-country contest.

Edwards easily won his native South Carolina and Clark, a retired Army general from Arkansas, barely won in neighboring Oklahoma.

"It's a huge night," Kerry told the Associated Press, even as rivals denied him a coveted sweep.

Racking up victories in Missouri, Arizona, North Dakota, New Mexico and Delaware, Kerry suggested that his rivals were regional candidates.

"I compliment John Edwards, but I think you have to run a national campaign, and I think that's what we've shown tonight," the four-term Massachusetts senator said.

"You can't cherry-pick the presidency."

With Iowa and New Hampshire already in his pocket, Kerry boasts a record of 7-2 in primary season contests, the undisputed front-runner who had a chance to put two major rivals away but barely failed.

An AP analysis showed Kerry winning 65 pledged delegates, Edwards 43, Clark five and Al Sharpton one, with 155 yet to be allocated. Kerry's wins in Missouri and Arizona were the night's biggest prizes, with 129 delegates – nearly half of the 269 at stake.

Tuesday's results pushed Kerry close to 200 delegates out of 2,162 needed for the nomination, including the superdelegates of lawmakers and party traditionalists. Dean trailed by nearly 70, Edwards by nearly 100.

Manhattan Mayor Mark Taussig declared Feb. 14 "Sharing With the Shepherd Day" in honor of Shepherd's Crossing.

Shepherd's Crossing is a local not-for-profit ministry founded by the Manhattan Ministerial Association.

The proclamation states the organization "portrays the love of Christ by providing assistance to all clients regardless of their own faith, creed, national origin, gender or race."

"Shepherd's Crossing is an awesome outreach to those in our community who are in need," Taussig said.

In the public comment portion of the meeting, Jan Garton represented the Flint Hills Living Wage Coalition in proposing a Living Wage Ordinance to the commission."The coalition is no stranger to this commission," Garton said.

She said the coalition wants the city to enact an ordinance requiring all corporations and businesses receiving tax breaks or incentives from the city, all city employees and all businesses holding large contracts with the city to provide a living wage, determined by 130 percent of the federal poverty level for a family of three.

Faulty dryer ignites small fire in 'Ville

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fire Tuesday afternoon at Ideal Cleaners, 1206 1/2 Moro St., caused minor damage to the business, Riley County Police Department and Manhattan Fire Department officials said.

Fire department Battalion Chief Arlen Loecker said the department blamed the fire on a faulty motor in the building's single dryer that sparked and caused the flames.

The police and fire departments arrived on the scene shortly before 2 p.m. Police officers closed off Moro Street at Manhattan Avenue, as well as 12th Street at Bluemont Avenue.

No injuries were reported in connection with the fire, Loecker said.

He said the building itself sustained an estimated $15,000 in damage, while the appliances, including a dry cleaning machine, dryer and merchandise within the structure, sustained damages in excess of $80,000.

More students transferring to K-State, learning to adjust to larger campus

Abe Beezley sacrificed a lot to transfer to K-State.

He left behind his hometown of Columbia, Mo.

But most importantly, the freshman in architecture left behind his wife – all for an architecture degree at K-State.

"I transferred strictly for the architecture program," Beezley said. "It is ranked among the highest in the nation, depending on what field you go into."

Beezley transferred to K-State after taking night classes at the Colombia College in Missouri. Before taking night classes, Beezley spent a year at the University of Missouri.

He is not alone.

Mike Lynch, associate vice president of education and personal development, said more students are deciding to begin their university courses at a community college or other school.

"At least 50 percent of the students who graduate from Kansas State have at least some transfer work," Lynch said.

The transition can be difficult for some students, Lynch said, comparing it to the freshman year of college for most traditional students.

There are many new things to deal with when coming to a larger university, such as new living situations, larger classes, different time schedules and increased independence, he said.

For Beezley, the large classes were an adjustment because he was used to classes of 18 to 20 students and more of a one-on-one environment.

"I have had the experiences that a lot of the freshmen, who are here now, have had," he said.

Julie Katz, assistant director of admissions, said research indicates the more transitions a student goes through, the less likely a student will connect with the university.

See TRANSFER Page 10

How to
Approve a transfer credit

1. Go to your adviser. The adviser will run a Degree Audit Reporting System report, where the non-transfer class will be listed there and titled No Transfer.
2. Present a syllabus or the book from the class in question to prove the class is worthy of credit.
3. The adviser and the student can collaborate on completing a Validation of Credit form.

Study says students ripped off by textbook prices

SAN JOSE, Calif. – A new study released Thursday titled, "Ripoff 101: How the current practices of the textbook industry drive up the cost of college textbooks," claims the average student spends nearly $900 on textbooks in one academic year.

The report, published by California Public Interest Research Group, states that students paid about $640 just seven years ago.

The study was prompted by University of California at Los Angeles students who returned last spring to find their tuition higher and wanted to find ways to cut costs.

One of the main complaints in "Ripoff 101" is the frequency with which new editions are placed on the market. According to the report, the average shelf-life of a textbook is three-and-a-half years

GLOWING RABBIT

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. – At the University of Minnesota, art and science rarely cross paths.

But members of both faculty are a part of "Gene[sis]: Contemporary Art Explores Human Genomics," which opened Saturday at the Weisman Art Museum.

For one work, an artist worked with a team of French geneticists to create "Alba," a transgenic animal created by splicing the DNA of an albino rabbit and a Pacific Northwest jellyfish. The result was a living rabbit that glows green under certain blue lights.

RECRUITING WITH SEX

BOULDER, Colo. – After meeting with University of Colorado President Elizabeth Hoffman, state senators decided Monday to delay a legislative inquiry into athlete recruiting practices at the CU-Boulder campus.

At an emergency Board of Regents meeting Friday, Hoffman is expected to appoint an independent panel to investigate allegations that CU used sex parties to recruit football players.

GOOD-LUCK ORANGES

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – People participating in the Chinese New Year celebration at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign received two oranges as they walked into the McKinley Foundation Friday night.

"The Cantonese pronunciation of oranges sounds like 'gold and fortune.'

"They are handed out in pairs because we hope that good things will come twice," Ivy Li, senior in business, said.

The New Year festivities included games of Chinese chess, Mahjong and karaoke.

BURSTING PIPES

AMES, Iowa – Women of Delta Zeta sorority at Iowa State University huddled in blankets Saturday and Sunday as they survived without heat.

Subzero temperatures in Iowa have resulted in water damage to homes, including Delta Zeta, as water pipes began freezing and then bursting.

The lack of heat was caused by a radiator leak, which caused a water pipe to freeze and burst.

Commerce might lose spot in Union at end of this summer

Financial services representative Emilee Kaiser helps Deisy Corredor, graduate student in biological engineering, and Juan Salazar, graduate student in chemical engineering, on Tuesday afternoon. Commerce Bank's contract with the K-State Student Union ends this summer.

Debit card system likely will replace current Wildcat Card

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Effective July 2, the Wildcat Card program, a partnership between Commerce Bank and K-State, will be no more.

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the K-State Student Union, said the contract with Commerce Bank, of which the Wildcat Card program was a mainstay, will be allowed to expire July 1.

This means that the bank located in the Union has the chance of not returning for the 2004-05 school year.

"This is strictly a contractual issue," Pitts said. "It has absolutely nothing to do with our level of satisfaction with the services Commerce provides."

He said Commerce Bank has been supportive of K-State.

"(Craig) Johnson did a thorough review of the program, and we felt it did not produce the results we wanted."

Pitts said there are plans to promote the debit card system that existed prior to the contract signed in 1997 with Commerce Bank. The debit card system is similar to the Wildcat Card, but does not go through a financial institution and is run by the K-State ID Center in the Union.

K-State ID Center Manager Craig Johnson said the debit card has remained in the system but was not promoted during the Union's contract with Commerce Bank.

"We were worried there would be confusion between it and the Wildcat Card," he said.

Johnson said the debit card program is designed to generate revenue for the ID center.

"We do not get much of our funding from the university," he said. "Most of our revenue comes from card replacement fees, so we needed something to generate more revenue."

Pitts said the K-State Purchasing Office has sent requests for proposal forms to other financial institutions for a bid on the branch office and the ATMs in the Union, the whose contracts also expire in July.

Pitts said he was hopeful there would be a positive response to the bid requests by local financial institutions.

"We hope that we get numerous responses from the banks in the community," Pitts said. "It did prove to be a very convenient service on campus."

Pitts said it was very important to realize all the ATMs and the branch location could remain the same, but that all institutions, including the current ones, would receive equal chance at the locations.

"This does not preclude Commerce or the current ATMs from remaining by any means," Pitts said. "If it is negotiated to be the best agreement, Commerce Bank will remain."

Nancy Levin, director of regional marketing for Commerce Bank, Kansas City, said the bank played no role in the decision to allow the contract to expire and could not comment on the reasoning behind the decision.

"It is our understanding that the university is putting out a request for a proposal," Levin said. "As of now, the branch is staying on campus until June."

K-State honor societies accepting applications; deadlines are next week

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As of Tuesday, interested students of senior standing by the fall 2004 semester have the chance to apply for the K-State honorary societies, Blue Key and Mortar Board.

Applications will be available in the Office of Student Activities and Services, the Leadership Studies and Programs office, or online at the Mortar Board and Blue Key Web sites.

The deadline for Blue Key applications is 5 p.m. Feb. 13 in the Leadership Studies House. Mortar Board applications are due Feb. 16.

Darcie Brownback, director of membership for Blue Key, said the society is a group of seniors who are selected for their leadership abilities.

This past year, Brownback said the 13 seniors were facilitators for the Introduction to Leadership Concepts class as well as leaders of a self-development program for freshmen and sophomores.

Blue Key members have always had the chance to create programs, Brownback said, and have never been held down to required plans for the year.

In order to apply for Blue Key, a student must have a 3.0 grade-point average, have senior status by the fall 2004 semester, and be on-campus both semesters of the 2004-05 academic year. Students also must include two letters of reference in their applications.

Brownback said the current group will pick between 10 and 19 members, based on a selection process that includes two interviews – one with a faculty member and one with the group. The society will make a final decision by March 7.

Larisa Budnovitch, membership selections chair for Mortar Board, said this year the society is made up of 28 students from all colleges across campus.

Throughout the year, Budnovitch said the group took part in a national project titled "Reading is Leading," where members visited local day cares and Head Start programs weekly and read books to children.

Mortar Board, Budnovitch said, is based on scholarship, leadership and service to the community.

Interested students must have a 3.3 GPA, have completed 75 hours by the fall 2004 semester, and have exemplary scholarship, leadership and service record.

Unlike Blue Key, there is no interview process or required letters of recommendation with Mortar Board.

Selections will be made March 8 through a process called tapping – when current society members go into an individual's class and announce that he or she has been selected to join Mortar Board.

Senate buildings closed after deadly toxin found in office

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – A jittery Senate faced its second attack with a deadly toxin in 28 months on Tuesday, this time in the form of ricin powder sent to Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist. Another letter containing ricin and bound for the White House had been intercepted in November, a law enforcement official disclosed.

No illnesses were reported in either case, but dozens of Senate workers were being monitored and work in the Senate slowed to a crawl.

Health experts expressed optimism that casualties would be averted in the new attack. None of the dozens of congressional employees near the Tennessee Republican's office on Monday when the white powder was discovered, was believed to be sick.

The ricin-laced letter addressed to the White House had been detected at an offsite mail processing facility, the law enforcement official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The investigation into that letter continues, and there have been no arrests, the official said. Authorities determined the letter posed no threat to health because of the ricin's low potency and granular form.

On Capitol Hill, all three Senate office buildings were shut Tuesday and were to be closed Wednesday, too. They could be closed the rest of the week.

That included the Dirksen Senate Office Building, where the substance was found Monday afternoon by a young worker in Frist's fourth-floor mailroom. A sign stating "Closed" hung from one of Dirksen's doors. Yellow sheets cordoned off areas inside.

The Capitol building – where security has reigned since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks – was closed to tourists.

TO THE POINT

Mayor wrong to mix religion and politics

Mayor Mark Taussig has again mixed religion and government.

A proclamation at Tuesday's City Commission meeting declared Feb. 14 as "Sharing with the Shepherd Day."

While the work of the Shepherd's Crossing organization, which helps those in need of financial help, is commendable, the reason for the proclamation seems to be based in the organization's inspiration rather than service.

Last fall, Taussig took a stance on a moral issue when he signed a marriage proclamation designating a week-long celebration of traditional marriage – excluding homosexual unions and divorced families.

It is not the role of city government officials to teach their citizens morals or support religious activities.

While Shepherd's Crossing should be recognized for its contributions to those in need, its members' faith is irrelevant and has no place in city meetings.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Pass on the porn

Years of viewing porn leave men with nothing but broken marriages

PAUL RESTIVO

It's not as easy to turn me on anymore.

And that's not a good thing.

I consider myself a fairly sexual person, but as the years have gone by and I passed my sexual peak, I sometimes find myself convincing myself that "Yes, you are supposed to get aroused here. Now cooperate."

I thought about why I don't often look twice when a nearly nude 20-something walks past in a restaurant.

Or sometimes at night, when, on that rare occasion I have a woman in bed next to me waiting for me to make a move, I fall asleep.

Could I have erectile dysfunction? Have I been really tired for the past year? Should I try creams?

No, those weren't it. What is it?

Pornography.

I first saw porn in my middle-teen years. It started with the late-night Showtime programming.

It evolved into HBO sex documentaries. (That's where I first saw the older-man penis.) Then came the Internet e-mails. I stumbled across one in my e-mail that cleverly said in its subject line, "Hi."

Well, silly me. Of course I want to see who greeted me, so I clicked on it.

To my surprise, and what would later be my awkward enjoyment, girls (the webmaster claimed they were over 18) sat spread-eagle with salacious grins and "toys" in their hands.

It's more than five years later, and I am immune to all of it.

In those five years, I have seen everything, including things I did not know the human body could do or wanted to do.

Take scat, for example. In this practice, we see that one person finds enjoyment in excreting on another, and vice versa.

I'm not really in to that.

Then there's snuff. Most of us heard about this last week in Germany. Snuff is when a person finds sexual enjoyment in mutilating another person to his or her death.

In last week's case, the victim responded to an online ad asking for young men who wanted to be mutilated and consumed. Yeah, he was eaten.

Again, not into that.

My personal favorites include midget porn, porn bloopers (use your imagination), and abnormal porn (penises the size of Buicks, etc.).

Illustrations by Ashley Chapman | COLLEGIAN

But when all is said and done, I have built such a high immunity to sex that the whole idea of it is demystified.

There are no secrets. There are no subtleties – the subtleties that can tease a person to arousal.

Nope. Not here.

Porn has made it difficult for me to get turned on easily.

Time magazine reported last week that pornography is suspected of being a cause of divorce.

I can see why. Husbands, for example, are not going to get turned on by a simple peck on the neck by the wife if, during his spare time, he is masturbating to busty cyber babes who are in constant heat on their web cams.

As for me, I'm in the three-step program. I've cut off my supply of porn, I didn't subscribe to cable, and I choose not to masturbate.

College shouldn't be crammed into 4 years

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

Finishing college in four years is like leaving the party at midnight.

What's the rush?

The stipulation that college must be finished in four years is antiquated and sometimes impossible. The requirements for individual majors, plus any minors or special interests have started cracking the four-year mold.

Next year will mark the beginning of my fifth-year victory lap. I am not ashamed of taking five years to finish school. I didn't fail any classes, except math, which I only repeated once. I have been a full-time student every semester, except when circumstances such as breaking my ass occurred. You can't plan for that when mapping your future.

Even though I lost a few credit hours transferring from Dodge City Community College, I could have found ways to finish school in four years.

I could have taken summer school and intersession courses, and loaded up on classes every semester. This ultimate dedication would have allowed me to graduate in four years. The years would have been a blur of panic and sleepless nights.

I'm enrolled in 16 hours this semester, work part-time and write columns. I consider myself comfortably busy.

Compared to friends and roommates who are crunching to finish college in four years or less, I am living on easy street.

But I chose to live.

I am enjoying my college experience and staying sane at the same time. You won't catch me taking 20 hours a semester, working full-time and essentially going insane.

I like not having panic attacks and knowing what day it is.

For students relying on their parents for tuition, taking an extra year may not be an option.

Students who support themselves may find a lack of money to be an issue when considering another year.

Students who have options should consider taking an extra semester or year when feeling the overwhelming crunch to finish school.

It may cost more and delay your career, but, remarkably, time and money aren't everything.

For students who have a choice, weighing your options is the key to choosing your college path.

Here are a few reasons I chose to take my personal fifth-year victory lap.

A LIFE

Being busy and dedicated is good for your health – living on caffeine pills and cigarettes is not. This is your life. You will always be busy, and it doesn't get any better. Your next rest will be retirement, unless you win the lottery. Why grow old in your early 20s trying to win a personal race against time? Even if you choose to ignore them, your health and mental well-being matter in college.

SUMMER

Summer is for making money and being with your friends and family. The bliss of summer and freedom and health doesn't last forever. Why spend long hours in the classroom, when you could be at the lake fishing until darkness falls, or traveling to new places with friends? You won't have this freedom forever. Don't stop living now for success in the future.

TIME TO PLAN

I don't know where I want to live or work. I need a fifth year to evaluate who I want to be and where I want to be. I could have had a degree this year, but I wouldn't have known what to do with it.

Some people may call my fifth year screwing off, but I call it living. See you in Aggieville.

Kathryn is a senior in public relations. You can e-mail her at opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

I think it's great the campus decided that the best place to put the big snow piles was in the campus parking that we don't need that much.

Well, if the intent of this semester was to get some more conservative columnists, I'd say Nasrina failed. Barbara Meyer's column is so far to the left that it wraps back around to neo-conservative.

Day out of school: free. Case of beer: $15. Seeing college kids steal little kids' sleds: priceless.

Again, Jonathan Lamb, what's your point? I think that column could have been reduced to just one sentence — I need to take responsibility for my actions.

What's up with Louie Novak never picking K-State to win? Just go to another school.

I'm an adult, and I want my shards-of-glass freezer pops.

I bet Britney's jealous now.

February is Black History Month.

OK, I have to ask: Was the Collegian's New Year's resolution to start sucking?

Cox, don't take away my ESPN. It's all I have left.

Is it a bad thing that at 6:00 this morning when they called off school we automatically decided to get a keg?

There are rules in professional wrestling.

Wanted: one decent head basketball coach.

Holy Jesus in heaven! It's a giant Q-tip.

I bet if we were to get everyone who straightened their hair into one room, and we all straightened our hair at the same time, we would set off the fire alarm.

I actually made money last time I went to the bars.

Hats off to whoever had the garbage bag-covered inner tube at CiCo Park yesterday. You had the best sled in the whole place, man.

I just saw the gerbil moving back into the dorms. He had his bags and everything.

We haven't won a Big 12 road game since 2001. We had to rely on a last-second 3-pointer to beat Gardner-Webb. Fire Jim Wooldridge.

Yeah, I just wanted to say that Gumby's has the nastiest pizza that I've ever tasted.

Hey University Commons, clear off your parking lot so I can get to school.

Useless knowledge

Eric Melin reads a trivia question in Auntie Mae's Parlor. Melin, host of the Trivia Smackdown, came up with the idea after playing similar games at Lawrence bars.

Auntie Mae's weekly quiz tests pop culture, science trivia

How to Play Trivia Smackdown

1. Trivia Smackdown contains a first, second and final round, not unlike Jeopardy.
2. It's a team game. Like Jeopardy, Smackdown gives double points in the second round, and teams decide how much to wager during the final round.
3. During the first two rounds, each team is read a question and allowed to answer.
4. If a team answers incorrectly, other teams have the opportunity to answer the question for half the points, or Smackdown another team.
5. When a Smackdown is called into play, the team being read the question chooses another team to "smack."
6. The smacked team either answers correctly and earns double the question's value, or answers incorrectly and the first team earns double the question's value.

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On a Wednesday night, smoke fills the dimly lit basement of Auntie Mae's Parlor, and waitresses zip between full tables taking drink orders.

The bar is so full, so early on a hump-day because of Trivia Smackdown, hosted by Ultimate Fakebook's drummer, Eric Melin. The event is at 8 p.m. every Wednesday and costs $5 to participate.

Anyone 21 or older may play.

The top two teams split the total entry fees collected.

Melin said questions come from the Internet, books and newspaper and magazine articles.

"I don't read for fun anymore," he said. "I'm looking for questions everywhere."

Melin, a Lawrence resident, became hooked on similar trivia games in Lawrence. He frequently visits his girlfriend in Manhattan and said Auntie Mae's is his bar of choice.

He convinced Auntie Mae's management to begin Trivia Smackdown.

"The big selling point is it gets people in early," Auntie Mae's co-owner Jeff Denney said. "Normally, we have six or seven people here at this time, but now we have 50."

Two weeks ago, there were eight teams playing, including Denney's own, Team Nosebleed.

"When this began, I told myself I wouldn't do it because people will say, 'Oh, he's got the inside track,' but I got hooked," Denney said.

"The key is to know the answer, and when you don't, to fake like you do," Gentry whispered to one of her teammates between questions.

Throughout the entire game, there was plenty of scheming. Team members looked around with shifty eyes while they wrote answers on covered pieces of paper, waiting for a chance to steal.

Melin said the key to winning is having a balanced team, because the questions cover such a variety of topics.

"You have to build up both sides," he said. "If you're good at pop culture and useless trivia, then find someone who is good with science."

"Hopefully, it's a lot more fun than the animated trivia games at other bars," Melin said. "It gives me a chance to be a ham."

Melin and his scorekeeper, Megan Dambro, are in place on the north side of Mae's basement, where a band might perform on a different night. They are the only two who know the questions and answers.

Despite the fact she could find out the answers if she wanted to, Dambro said she doesn't see the point.

"I'll write the answer on my hand and ask him if I'm right," she said.

Dambro is part of Melin's crew; she travels from Lawrence every Wednesday night. She said it was she who began taking Melin to trivia contests in Lawrence.

"I keep Eric in line and make sure we get everybody's answers," she said. "It's not too difficult, until the end of the night."

The bar slowly filled, and by the beginning of the second round, the bar looked full, which meant more people playing Trivia Smackdown.

The category for the final round was board games.

The question was, "The man who developed 'Monopoly' took the names from actual properties in Atlantic City. Which one did he misspell?"

Gentry takes Sir Ohsis' answer and the answers for nearby teams to Melin at the front. Once there, she gives her boyfriend a kiss.

Not to be outdone, Denney also kisses Melin on the cheek, when he takes up Team Nosebleed's answer.

However, Team Nosebleed, who was the whipping boy for the entire game, saves just enough to win the game. Team Nosebleed members split the first place prize, about $100 on that night.

"I had a blast," Denney said. "We got just a little than four questions right and were in last place until the very end."

Comedian Foxx avoids jail time for casino arrest

Actor/comedian Jamie Foxx has worked a deal with prosecutors in New Orleans that will help keep him out of jail for a 2003 casino arrest.

Foxx, who starred in the 1990s answer to "Saturday Night Live" in his controversial variety show, "In Living Color," pleaded guilty to one count of disturbing the peace, which is a misdemeanor. He was placed on two-years' probation and was fined $1,500.

Foxx's guilty plea resulted in a sign-off by the judge presiding over the case, the Office of the Orleans Parish District Attorney announced.

Pixar looking for new post-Disney partner

Pixar Animation Studios ended talks with Walt Disney Co. executives late last month to extend its partnership contract with the company that made Mickey Mouse a cultural icon.

Pixar, known for such computer-animated films as "Toy Story," "Monsters Inc.," and "Finding Nemo," will begin searching for a partnership with another film company, Pixar representatives announced Jan. 29.

Disney chairman and chief executive officer Michael Eisner said Pixar was requesting too much money for a contract renewal.

Pixar's next venture is the animated feature "The Incredibles" slated for theatrical release this November.

Kutcher to quit 'That '70s Show' in 2005

Kutcher

Grace revealed in an interview recently that he and Kutcher were planning to call it quits on the acclaimed television sitcom "That '70s Show" after the end of the 2005 season. The contracts for the actors expire after the end of the 2004-05 season.

Kutcher and Grace battled it out in the box office late last month: Kutcher's psychological thriller, "The Butterfly Effect," beat out Grace's romantic comedy, "Win a Date With Tad Hamilton." "Butterfly" raked in $17 million on opening weekend, while "Hamilton" barely made $7 million.

'The Big Bounce' flops with sloppy writing, poor acting

"The Big Bounce"
★☆☆☆☆
Movie review by Christopher Harrop

The chances of striking cinematic gold are increased greatly by an illustrious lineup of stars working from a great source.

The "Bounce" con man Jack Ryan (Owen Wilson) is after a stash of $200,000 held by local resort developer and nasty man Ray Ritchie (Gary Sinise).

With the help of Ritchie's mistress (model-turned-actress Sara Foster), Jack schemes past Ritchie's henchmen (Vinnie Jones and Charlie Sheen) while working for a local judge (Morgan Freeman) who owns a resort rival to Ritchie's.

The film is an adaptation of an old Elmore Leonard story, the author behind the wonderful "Get Shorty" and "Out of Sight." However, the characters in "Bounce" – written for the screen by Sebastian Gutierrez ("Gothika") – are bad comic caricatures.

Leonard, in an interview with the Associated Press, said the story was far from his original story and that serving as a consultant for the film "didn't do much good."

The actors muddle through the film's 88 minutes with very little story to act out.

Most scenes are intermingled with scenic views of the Hawaiian islands, as well as clips of surfers riding the waves.

While they do nothing to advance the story, they attempt to make the audience forget how dull the story has become.

The movie jumps straight to conclusion in many scenes with little or no setup.

With the plot twist near the finale, no explanation is given for it, making for a cheap comic thrill that leaves a sour taste in one's mouth.

Although Foster is given a decent role as the tricky seductress, it is painfully evident this is her first acting job.

I hope this film will do poorly enough to not propel her on to stardom, like "The Mask" did for the equally terrible Cameron Diaz.

Even Morgan Freeman, one of the finest actors of his generation, is relegated to a bit player.

While Freeman is not terrible in "The Big Bounce," it certainly seems his main motivation as an actor was the prospect of getting paid to spend a few weeks in Hawaii.

If there is any redeeming quality to this film, it is the sight of Wilson, Freeman, Harry Dean Stanton and Willie Nelson sitting around, playing dominoes and laughing it up.

While the scene ultimately is as useless as any, it is the most natural and convincing moment in the film.

Movie-goers looking for a lighthearted escape to the lush and tropical surroundings of Hawaii would be wise to check out "The Big Bounce," but only if they don't mind sloppy writing, phoned-in performances and a half dozen jokes that fall flat on their faces into the sand.

Cell-phone rings popular in Britain, United States

Play that funky ringtone, cell phone user.

British newspapers report cell phone ringtone sales have surpassed record single sales in the U.K., and the United States isn't far behind in the fad. In all, ringtone sales account for $33.5 billion in annual sales worldwide. Popular ringtones take the tune of popular songs, one of the more popular recently being Outkast's hit single, "Hey Ya."

Alumni asked to bring businesses back to city

By Kelli Pitman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce asked 5,000 K-State alumni to bring their businesses back to Manhattan in an effort to continue the city's business growth.

Last October, the chamber began its "Come Home to K-State" campaign, asking K-State graduates who are now executives to consider expanding or relocating in Manhattan.

The targeted audience graduated between 1964 and 1999 and now is president, vice president, partner, CEO, COO, CAO, chairman, etc.

Each received a packet of information featuring the qualities of Manhattan beneficial to business. The packet emphasized the quality of life and cost of living in Manhattan along with the friendly atmosphere and opportunities for growth.

Business owners offered why they chose to begin their businesses in Manhattan.

Lyle Butler, president and CEO of the Chamber of Commerce, said the project is part of the chamber's strategic economic development plan called Advantage Manhattan.

The "Come Home" campaign is one component of this marketing program specifically targeting K-State alumni in lead management or ownership positions.

"As K-Staters, they are already familiar with K-State and Manhattan, and we thought this would be a good audience to target if they are thinking of expanding or relocating," Butler said.

The idea came from other cities and universities that have successfully used a similar project. The Chamber of Commerce began working on the project two and a half years ago, and last fall it was finally ready to implement, Butler said.

K-State graduates Dave Dreiling, CEO of GTM Sportswear, and Joe Farrar, president and CEO of Farrar Corp., were both featured in the marketing material sent.

Dreiling and Farrar said they believe that this project will be successful.

"It is a well-thought-out program, and our community has a lot to offer," Farrar said. "It just depends on timing. If you get someone when they are planning to relocate or expand, then there are great possibilities."

Butler said there has been a positive response from the campaign, but that it will be a long-term project. Six responses have been received, and they are anticipating more in the future.

"This is an ongoing process," he said. "Some companies might not make a decision for a year, or two or five."

Current Manhattan business owners are supportive of the project, but do have concerns with recruiting outside business.

Dave Colburn, manager of The Pathfinder, said the business welcomes new competition. His only concern is whether the recruited businesses will receive financial incentives to move to Manhattan.

"You can't be afraid of new competition, but any business gets concerned when incentives are involved," Colburn said.

Butler said no incentives were offered through the campaign, because it is simply a project to increase awareness. However, there is a possibility of financial support for new businesses in the future.

Derek Christensen, owner of Kidz World, said having more businesses in Manhattan is positive because it makes the local economy stronger and helps existing businesses continue to grow.

"The people they are targeting are familiar with the community, they know the values here, and if they come back, they obviously like the community and have a positive feeling about Manhattan," Christensen said.

Dreiling said the workforce in Manhattan has a great advantage for businesses because of the large number of students in the labor pool. The program's effort offers more upper-management jobs, and offers an opportunity for students to begin their own businesses in the area.

"Being in Manhattan offers great opportunities to get upper level management employees that have graduated from K-State to come work for these companies. They are excited to come back here," Dreiling said.

Number of dead rises to 101 in attack

By Scheherezade Faramarzi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRBIL, Iraq – The number of dead rose to 101 Tuesday in the twin suicide bombings of two Kurdish political offices, the highest confirmed toll in any terrorist attack since the U.S. invasion of Iraq. Kurds blamed Ansar al-Islam, a militant group allegedly linked to Osama bin Laden's al-Qaeda.

The string of insurgent attacks killed another American soldier Tuesday and came as U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan met with President Bush and announced he'll send a team to Iraq to break an impasse between the U.S.-led coalition and the Shiite Muslim clergy over how to transfer power to Iraqis.

In Baghdad, the U.S.-led Coalition Provisional Authority put the death toll from Sunday's attacks against the offices of the Kurdistan Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan at 101, with 133 people still hospitalized.

The attacks – by bombers with explosives wired to their bodies – were the bloodiest since at least Aug. 29, when a vehicle bombing outside a Shiite mosque in Najaf killed more than 85 people. Some estimates have placed the Najaf death toll much higher.

U.S. Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt said the U.S. investigation has not determined who was behind the attacks in Irbil, though he would not rule out either Ansar al-Islam or al-Qaeda.

Kimmitt, deputy chief of staff for operations, also said there had been an average of 23 engagements each day over the past week between U.S. forces and Iraqi insurgents, a slight increase over the figure of 18 reported last week.

One American soldier was killed and another was wounded Tuesday when a roadside bomb exploded during an operation to clear such weapons, the U.S. command said. The explosion happened near Iskandariyah, 35 miles south of Baghdad.

Earlier Tuesday, insurgents fired two rockets at Baghdad International Airport but caused no casualties, the U.S. military said. The airport is used as a major base for the military.

Witness testifies he gave Stewart stock tip

By Erin McClam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – A young ex-brokerage assistant testified Tuesday his boss ordered him to pass a secret tip to Martha Stewart that led the style maven to trigger her well-timed sale of ImClone Systems stock.

Douglas Faneuil, the government's star witness in the case, said broker Peter Bacanovic ordered him to alert Stewart on Dec. 27, 2001, that the family of ImClone founder, Sam Waksal, was dumping its shares.

Faneuil said he told Bacanovic, who was on vacation in Florida, about a flurry of selling by the Waksals that morning. He said Bacanovic blurted out: "Oh my God, get Martha on the phone."

Waksal later admitted that he had advance knowledge that the Food and Drug Administration was about to reject an ImClone drug application – a decision that sent the stock on a sharp decline.

Faneuil, who was manning Bacanovic's desk at Merrill Lynch & Co. on Dec. 27, testified that he took calls before 10 a.m. from Waksal's accountant and Waksal's two daughters – all demanding that Faneuil sell their ImClone shares.

He said he spoke to Bacanovic, who left a message for Stewart, and then ordered Faneuil to tell her of the Waksal sell-off when she called back. Faneuil said he asked his boss whether passing the tip would be appropriate.

"Of course. You must," he said Bacanovic replied. "That's the whole point."

Stewart was unavailable and on her way to her own vacation in Mexico. But she called later in the day and ordered her entire stable of 3,928 shares of ImClone to be sold, the prosecution contends.

The government claims Stewart and Bacanovic cooked up a false story and repeatedly lied to investigators, saying they had a pre-existing arrangement to sell ImClone when it fell to $60 per share.

The testimony of Faneuil, a lanky 28-year-old who was soft-spoken in his answers on the stand, is the most critical piece of the puzzle the government says implicates Stewart.

His testimony was delayed by five days after the judge penalized prosecutors for being too slow in turning over an FBI document that defense attorneys say raises questions about Faneuil's credibility.

When court recessed Tuesday, Faneuil had not reached the point in his testimony where he was expected to say he actually told Stewart the Waksals were selling. While Faneuil testified in general terms about improperly passing information from one client to another, details of his exchange with Stewart are expected to come out Wednesday morning.

Lawyers for Bacanovic and Stewart are carefully planning a strategy for Faneuil's cross-examination, which could begin as early as Wednesday. Faneuil had initially supported Bacanovic and Stewart's story, but changed his story in a 2002 plea deal with prosecutors.

State panel endorses bill to increase alcohol taxes

By Bill Draper
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Legislation permitting local decisions on Sunday liquor sales and sharply raising the state's tax on alcohol cleared a committee Tuesday and headed to the full Senate for debate.

The increase in the gallonage tax would raise an estimated $11 million a year, senators said.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee endorsed the heavily amended bill after rejecting a larger tax proposal and an attempt to allow liquor sales on Memorial Day, Independence Day and Labor Day.

Other sections of the bill would allow cities to pass liquor ordinances more restrictive than the state's laws and would require a quarterly compliance check of businesses that sell alcohol.

In addition, the bill clarifies that the state's liquor control act applies uniformly throughout Kansas, forbidding local governments from exempting themselves from parts of it and creating their own alcohol statutes.

Several cities – mostly along the border with Missouri, where Sunday sales are legal – have passed Sunday sales ordinance in the 16 months since a Wyandotte County district judge ruled that the liquor law act was not uniform.

The state's appeal of that ruling is before the Kansas Supreme Court.

Under the bill endorsed Tuesday, local governments would decide whether they wanted Sunday sales. But voters could have their say if at least 10 percent of those who voted in the previous general election signed a petition opposing Sunday sales.

The tax increases, proposed by Sen. John Vratil, would raise the tax on beer to 30 cents a gallon from 18 cents; on fortified wine, to $1.50 from 75 cents a gallon; on light wine, to 60 cents from 30 cents a gallon; and on alcohol and spirits, to $4 a gallon from $2.50.

"Gallonage taxes have not been increased in 27 years," Vratil, R-Leawood, told the committee.

Vratil said the increase on beer would raise $6.7 million, and the increase on alcohol and spirits would bring in an additional $3.6 million.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said she had not seen the details of Vratil's tax increase Tuesday afternoon but was not surprised the hike was tied to Sunday sales.

"I think there was some theory at least that was talked about last year where if there are going to be additional sales days, the trade-off should be that we raised a little more money," Sebelius said.

The committee rejected an amendment by Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, to raise alcohol taxes by even greater amounts – $56 million in the first year and a total $301 million through five years.

He suggested raising the 18-cent beer tax to 98 cents per gallon, or about 50 cents on a six-pack.

Barnett wanted to devote the new revenue to schools, mostly for bilingual education and programs that help at-risk students. A portion also would go to treating fetal alcohol syndrome.

But Sen. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, said Barnett's proposal could hurt beer sales, especially in border areas where people could buy beer in a neighboring state with lower taxes.

"I believe a 388 percent tax increase on anything is pretty onerous," O'Connor said.

The amendment to allow alcohol sales on three summer holidays, proposed by Pete Brungardt, R-Salina, was defeated after Barnett argued that the move would make those holidays more deadly on the state's highways.

Florida girl's abduction caught on surveillance tape

By Vickie Chachere
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARASOTA, Fla.– The FBI joined the search Tuesday for an 11-year-old girl whose apparent abduction was videotaped by a car wash surveillance camera. The youngster's parents pleaded for her safe return.

"Please release Carlie. Please give me my baby," begged Carlie Brucia's mother, Susan Schorpen.

The sixth-grader was seen on videotape being led away by a man as she took a shortcut behind a closed car wash on her way home from a friend's house Sunday night.

The sheriff's department is working with the FBI, state law enforcement authorities and the Center for Missing and Exploited Children. More than 100 calls from the public have come in, and an unidentified company offered a $25,000 reward for information.

"Carlie, if you can see and hear this, please know we will stop at nothing," sheriff's Maj. Kevin Gooding said at a news conference, telling the little girl to run and get help if she can. "We won't stop until we find you. Please, Carlie, don't give up."

The surveillance tape showed a white man in his late 20s or early 30s approach Carlie. The blond, blue-eyed girl did not appear to know him.

The man, who was wearing a mechanic's shirt with a name patch on one breast, spoke to her for a few seconds, then grabbed her by the arm and led her away.

Her parents said they do not recognize the man, who investigators said had tattoos on both forearms.

The FBI was working with NASA to enhance the images from the tape in hopes of lifting more clues.

Authorities were also looking into the account of a caller nearly 100 miles away in Kissimmee who said he saw a man appearing to struggle with a girl early Tuesday in a parking lot.

Based on that witness's account, authorities also were looking for a green, four-door Honda or Nissan.

Recruits to sign today

Cats have secured verbal commitments from top athletes

By Marshall Ice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is finally here. Today is National Signing Day for football recruits.

K-State addressed needs arising from the graduation of several key players on both sides of the ball.

With quarterbacks Ell Roberson and Jeff Schwinn out of eligibility, the Cats have secured verbal commitments from a pair of top-notch high school signal callers.

Nick Patton of Winfield, Kan., is a 6'3", 205-pound dual-threat quarterback ranked as the 68th best overall prospect in the country by www.espn.com.

"He throws the ball well, and he has a good arm," Winfield coach Brian Shaw said in November. "If you need him to, he can run with the ball. He also has the size to be pretty durable."

Papillion, Neb., quarterback Allan Evridge, who backed out of a commitment to Nebraska to commit to K-State, is also a threat when running or passing with 4.5 speed and a solid 6'1", 205-pound frame.

Live broadcast

What: Powercat Gameday's Matt Wolters and Tim Fitzgerald will introduce K-State's new football recruits. Fans will have a chance to meet the newest additions.
When: 4 p.m. today
Where: Kite's, Aggieville

With center Nick Leckey likely going to the NFL, K-State has received verbal commitments from two in-state high school offensive lineman.

Cherryvale's Matt Boss is a 6'5", 315-pound guard who www.rivals.com has listed as a four-star recruit. Caleb Handy is a 6'2", 300-pound center from Conway Springs.

K-State co-defensive coordinator Brett Bielema, who is in charge of recruiting for the Cats, used his Florida connections to secure verbal commitments from at least four recruits from the Sunshine State.

Lester Graham, who also played at John Carroll, is a speedy, smaller linebacker at 6'0", 215 pounds.

Defensive end Vladimir Faustin of Pace High School in Miami and offensive lineman Ryan Schmidt of Boca Raton also have given verbal commitments.

K-State recruited heavily in Texas.

Defensive back Kyle Williams of Navarro Junior College is 6'1", 190 pounds with 4.4 speed.

Running back Parrish Fisher of Pearce High School in Richardson was a two-time all-district player at 5'9", 204 pounds.

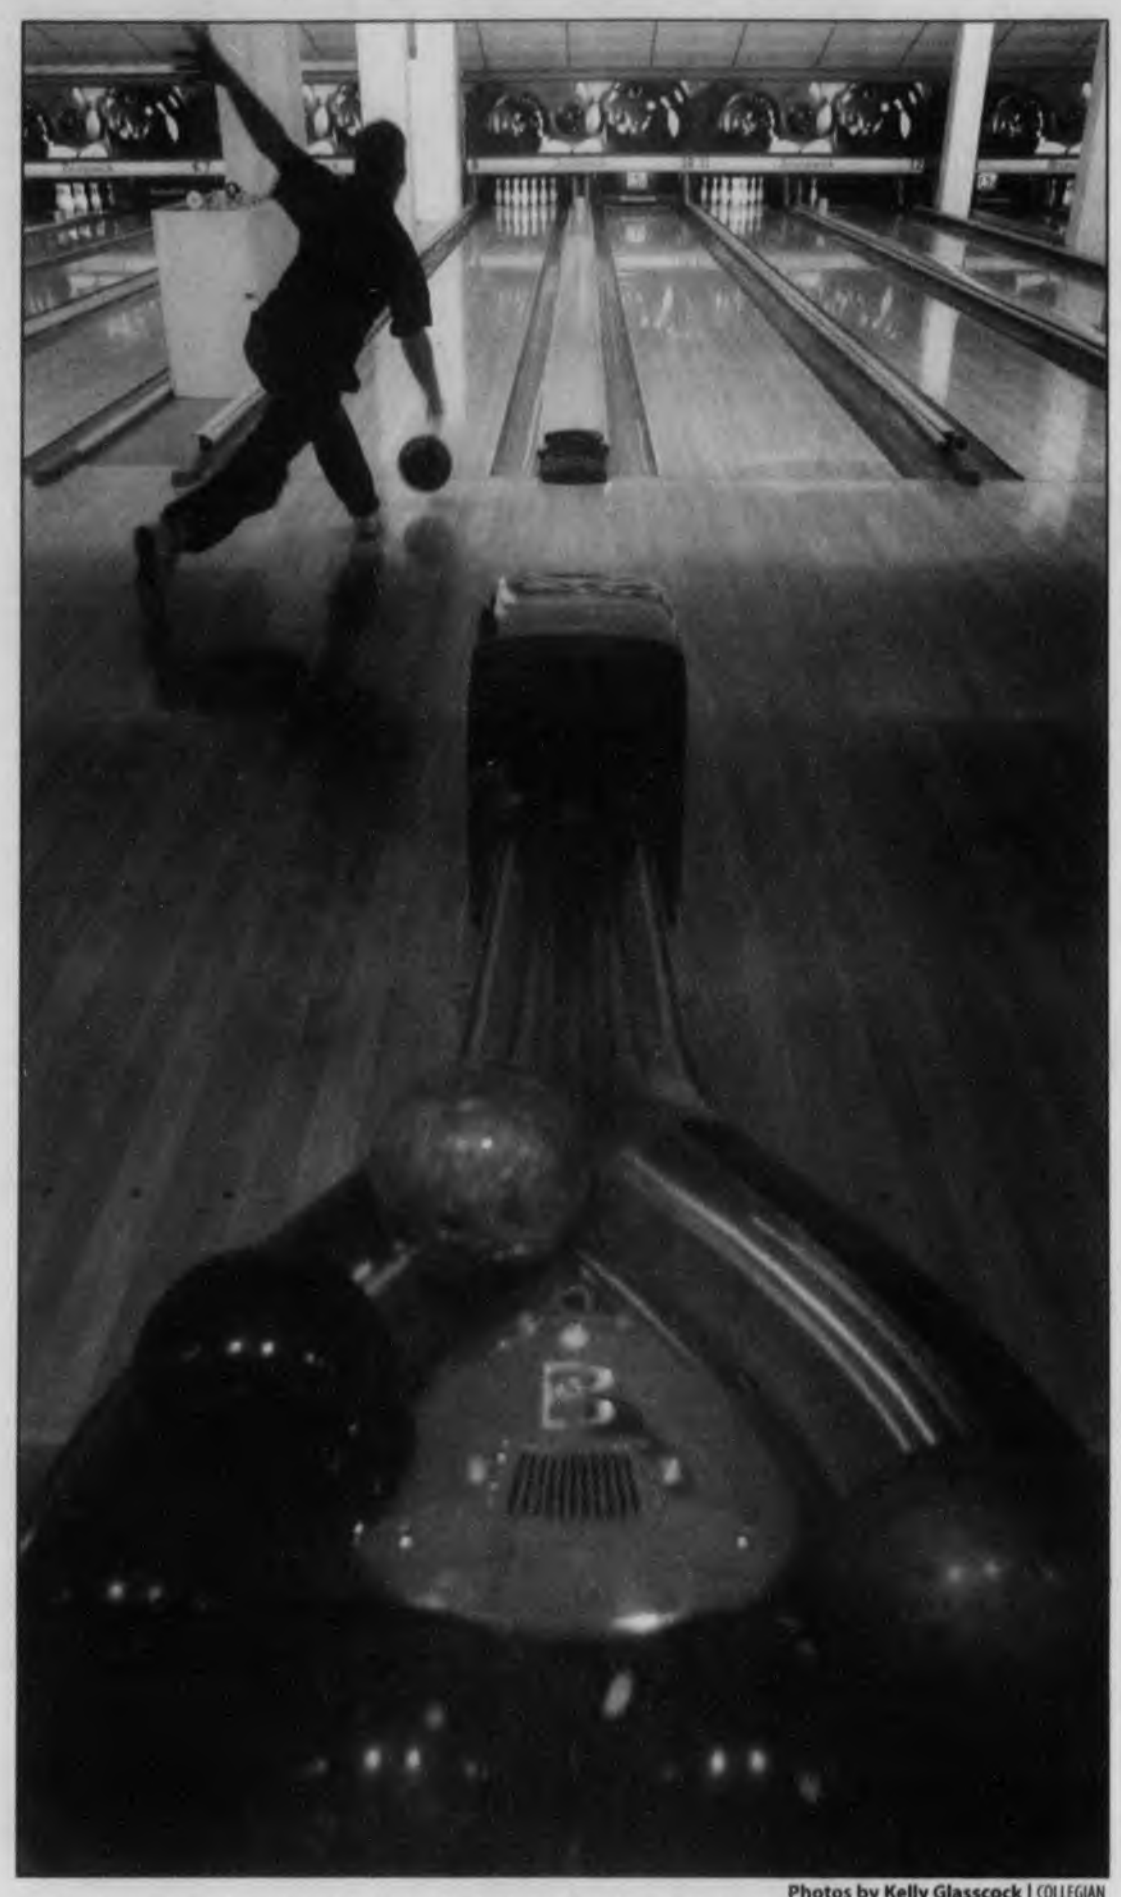
Cornerback Maurice Porter from City College of San Francisco has the size and speed to be a shut-down corner, at 6'1", 190 pounds. Porter's junior college teammate Bret Jones, a 6'1", 195-pound defensive back, also inked early with K-State.

Six-foot receiver Yamon Figurs has 4.4 speed and is the latest K-State recruit from Garden City Community College; the same school produced current starting cornerback, Cedrick Williams.



Recruited as an athlete, Jesse Martinez of Santa Rosa, Calif. Junior College may not have a position, but he has speed, running a 4.4 40, despite being 6'6". Justin D'Arcy of Cabrillo College in Aptos, Calif., is a 6'6", 305-pound offensive tackle.

Nothing is official until the players sign a letter of intent.

K-State Sports Information Director Garry Bowman said K-State officials cannot comment on individual recruits until after signing day.

"It is all a guessing game until those signed letters of intent come in," Bowman said Tuesday.

Bowling leagues offer competition

Sara Wier, junior elementary education; Jason Wagner, senior in landscape design; and Brent Wagner, senior in social science watch their teammate bowl at the bowling alley in the K-State Student Union during bowling league night.

It used to be a chance for middle-aged men to put on goofy shoes and tacky shirts with embroidered names.

The goofy shoes are still around, but, as evidenced by the large amount of student participation, league bowling night has become cool.

League play began for the spring semester last week at the Union Recreation Center, but there still are many openings for teams in a variety of leagues.

Competition runs for 14 weeks and finishes before finals week. Each league plays one night a week.

Recreation Manager Terri Eddy said anyone interested still may join. She expects about 475 people to join a league this semester, about 65 percent of whom will be students.

"(Bowling) is a fun thing to do in winter when you can't go outside," she said. "It's cheap entertainment, it costs about $5.50 a week. You can't go to a movie for that."

That cost is per person per week. The price may vary depending on the amount of Basketball fans deserve more free nachos for attending games

NABIL SHAHEEN

There was a lot of free milk being handed out in Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 24.

With about two minutes to go in the game, Viva Milk reminded Husker fans that, should their beloved women's basketball team score 60 or more points, which they already had, fans would get 50 cents off a gallon of milk.

Score 70 points or more – they had 79 at the time – it would be a dollar off.

Should the Huskers, in the last two minutes, get one more bucket, then about 5,000 gallons of the finest milk in all the land would be available to anyone who had the ticket to prove they had witnessed the shocking upset of our Wildcat women's team, 81-63.

Viva la Viva!

See, now that's more like it.

Bobby T's Sports Bar and Grill offers a similar deal in Manhattan for basketball games. Should the men or the women break the 100-point barrier at a game, then it's free nachos all around for anyone who brings in their ticket stub.

It's probably more fitting to celebrate my team's victory by going to the local sports bar after the game and enjoying some free nachos with my friends, to stop by the local Dillons on my way home to get my free milk, go home, put it in my fridge and let it sit there until the last few precious days before the expiration date, when I binge drink milk in an attempt to beat the clock.

It is agreed Bobby T's has a pretty cool deal. And certainly, a "We want nachos" chant in the winding moments of the game is a lot more clever than "Milk, milk, milk," but how often do either of our teams score 100 points?

The last time the women did, was Nov. 9. The game was in the preseason against a European team ranging in ages from something like 16-30. But you still got your nachos, and that's great.

The last time they scored 100 points in the regular season at home was a year ago, Jan. 5, against Iowa.

When was the last time the men scored more than 100 at home?

Dec. 12, 2002 against Texas-Pan American.

My point is, this nachos promotion is a great thing, but a score of 60, 70 or 80 points is a lot easier to come by, and would make the game more fun for fans than the rare 100.

Don't get me wrong, scoring 100 points in college basketball is awfully special, no matter what team it is or which gender is playing, but at the same time, these promotions should be a bit more frequent and bit easier to attain.

You, the fans, deserve it.

After all, your passion for basketball in the Purple Palace has made K-State women's games, on average, the seventh-highest attended contests in the country.

Whenever our men's or women's team takes the floor, they certainly make every second of that 40-minute period worth watching, so why not make it worth your time and mine after the game?

Either way, thaw yourself and your car out and get down to Bramlage Coliseum at 7 p.m. tonight as the K-State men look to right the ship when they face the Huskers.

Who knows, you might be missing some free nachos.

But I kinda doubt that.

NBA | Kobe's attorneys ask judge to throw out evidence

Hammering at the work of police interrogators, defense attorneys urged a judge Tuesday to bar Kobe Bryant's secretly recorded police statement and physical evidence, including a blood-stained T-shirt, from the NBA star's upcoming rape trial.

Prosecutors fought back, saying sheriff's investigators did nothing without Bryant's consent.

CBB | Knight reprimanded for spat with chancellor

Knight

Tech athletic director Gerald Myers said in a statement that "appropriate personnel action" was taken regarding Monday's verbal spat involving the coach at an upscale grocery store.

This is the first time Tech has punished Knight in his three seasons at the school.

He was hired in March 2001, six months after he was fired by Indiana for what then-school president Myles Brand called his "pattern of unacceptable behavior."

NFL | Marino resigns new position with Dolphins

Dan Marino resigned as senior vice president of the Miami Dolphins on Tuesday, only three weeks after accepting a job to return to the team he quarterbacked for 17 seasons.

Marino

"I have decided that it would not be in the best interests of either my family or the Dolphins to assume the role as the team's senior vice president of football operations," Marino said in a statement released by the team.

Owner Wayne Huizenga said the Dolphins will begin searching for "a senior executive who has an extensive football background" to join Miami's management team and oversee football operations.

It has not been determined if that person would have the same title Marino was given in his short stint as an executive.

NFL | Henson to leave Yankees, return to football

Henson's agent, Casey Close, told the New York Yankees the third baseman is quitting after three mediocre seasons as a full-time minor leaguer, a baseball official said Monday on the condition of anonymity.

Henson will forfeit the $12 million he's owed from the contract he agreed to with the Yankees in 2001, the official said.

The NFL's Houston Texans, who hold the quarterback's rights, announced Monday that Henson would work out with the team on Feb. 12 in a showcase for the other 31 NFL franchises.

NBA | James not voted to All-Star team

LeBron James missed the cut Tuesday in voting for All-Star reserves, finishing behind Eastern Conference guards Paul Pierce, Michael Redd, Baron Davis and Jason Kidd.

James

The league's 29 coaches selected the reserves.

James is averaging 20.8 points, 5.9 assists and 5.9 rebounds for the Cleveland Cavaliers, whose surge of six victories in eight games has moved them into contention for a playoff spot in the East.

Other players having strong seasons who did not make the All-Stars include: Mike Bibby of Sacramento, Latrell Sprewell of Minnesota, Chauncey Billups and Richard Hamilton of Detroit, Michael Finley of Dallas and Zach Randolph of Portland.

TRANSFER | Programs available to help transfer students get involved

"Some don't get involved, but it certainly depends on the student – what their educational background has been and what their social background has been," she said.

Katz said K-State has a transfer equivalency program not available at many other colleges and universities. This helps students like Beezley transfer more easily.

Students, she said, also can have problems transferring if they change majors in the process.

"There are things that one college will take, transfer and apply toward graduation requirements in some programs that may not apply in other programs," Katz said.

Beezley said so far, his transfer to K-State has been pretty easy.

One of the primary problems, he said, was finding housing a week before school started.

"It was very difficult finding a home," Beezley said.

Despite the adjustments, Beezley said he was ready to accept the challenge of transferring to another school.

"I have had so many experiences in my lifetime that haven't been easy, so I think I have a little bit of an edge over most the students," he said.

"I think the college is going to be a really good college to finish out with."

In nearly every region of the nation, the most diverse group of Democrats yet to cast votes this primary season said they had a singular priority: Defeat President Bush this fall.

"I don't care who wins" the Democratic primary, said Judy Donovan of Tucson, Ariz. "I'd get my dog to run. I'm not kidding. I would get Mickey Mouse in there. Anybody but Bush."

In state after state, exit polls showed Kerry dominated among voters who want a candidate with experience or who could beat Bush.

Edwards had said he must win South Carolina, and he did by dominating among voters who said they most value a candidate who cares about people like them.

"It's very easy to lay out the map to get us to the nomination," Edwards told the AP, drawing a line from Michigan on Saturday to Virginia and Tennessee next Tuesday.

To the roar of his supporters, Edwards declared, "The politics of lifting people up beats the politics of tearing people down."

As the votes were being counted in Oklahoma, Clark mused about the future of his candidacy. "This could be over," he told reporters. Hours later, he had won Oklahoma and finished second in Arizona and New Mexico _ enough to fight another day.

Edwards narrowly lost to Clark in Oklahoma, missing a chance to show his presidential mettle outside the South and emerge as Kerry's chief rival.

BOWLING | Bowling leagues provide friendly competition, prizes

the league's prize fund.

Bowlers have the option of paying weekly or for the entire season. The fee does not include shoe rental.

There are several types of leagues to choose from, including sanctioned mixed, mixed, men's sanctioned, residence halls, faculty, greek mixed and fraternity. There are multiple mixed and men's divisions.

Teams must have four people. In the mixed leagues, at least one team member must be of the opposite sex.

Eddy encouraged anyone to come bowl, regardless of talent.

"We just give kids a place to have fun and get a break from classes," she said. "It's not blood and guts competitive."

For those wanting competition, however, the leagues offer plenty.

Other perks for the league bowlers include discounts for open bowling and prizes of free games, drinks and sandwich coupons during competition.

Ryan Harris, senior in electrical engineering, and Nathan Riley, senior in architectural engineering, are on a team in the sanctioned men's-two league. They have played in a league for several semesters.

Riley said forming relationships with the other bowlers is one advantage of playing in the same league for several seasons.

"About the same teams play every semester," he said. "You get to know each other real well."

Harris said during the course of the season, all 14 teams play each other and the team with the best win-loss record takes home the largest cash prize. The top runner-up teams also receive cash prizes, as do the top individual bowlers.

He said the winner of each game is determined by the combined score of the four team members for their three games that night.

Being a multiple-year veteran, Harris has several reasons for returning for another season.

"It's a good time to hang out with friends, bowl and drink some beer," he said.

COMMISSION | Officials discuss Super Bowl halftime incident

Commissioner Brad Everett gave an emotionally charged speech regarding the incident.

"I, for one, was offended by the substandard halftime performance," Everett said. "Some claim freedom of speech or freedom of expression. Not when you infect my family."

Everett said he was upset because his four children witnessed the incident on television.

"You don't have a right to be airing that stuff," he said. "Janet Jackson or anyone else."

The commission voted 5-0 to approve the first reading of an ordinance to increase parking fines from $2 to $5.

Council members, along with City Attorney William Frost and Assistant City Manager Jason Hilgers, expressed some concern that tickets were being ignored.

Frost said even though fines increase after three days, most of the time, the infraction takes seven to 10 days to process anyway.

"Ninety percent of the people who have a conscience pay the thing," Commissioner Mark Hatesohl said. "The other 10 percent don't give a rat's anything."

Hilgers said, of the about 1,500 people who received parking tickets in 2003 nearly all the infractions were paid.

Teen found stabbed at school, classmate charged

By Coralie Carlson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI – A 14-year-old boy was apparently stabbed to death in a school bathroom Tuesday, and a schoolmate was charged with first-degree murder.

Jaime Rodrigo Gough was cut with a sharp object and bled to death, said Miami-Dade School spokesman Mayco Villafana. Other students at Southwood Middle School found Gough's body around 8:30 a.m., officials said.

Michael Hernandez, 14, was charged after he was interviewed for several hours, police said. It was not immediately known if Hernandez's parents, who were with him during the interview, had hired an attorney.

Chief Pete Cuccaro of the Miami-Dade Schools Police Department said the suspect and victim "knew each other very well," but refused to elaborate.

Gough died of a neck wound, police said. A weapon was found.

Juveniles charged with first-degree murder in Florida are charged as adults.

Other children at the school were locked in their classrooms with their teachers as a precaution for most of the day before they were sent home in the afternoon. More than 150 worried parents gathered outside.

Antonio Gough, Jaime's uncle, said his nephew was a good student who played baseball, the violin and the flute, and was not a troublemaker.

"I still can't believe this can happen," Antonio Gough said.

CBS to set time delay for Sunday's Grammy Awards

By David Bauder
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK– Following Janet Jackson's surprise breast-baring on the Super Bowl halftime show, CBS said Tuesday it would institute a video delay system to avoid any recurrence at Sunday's Grammy Awards.

CBS technicians were scrambling to invent the software – something more than five-second audio delay the network has used to bleep out swear words, as when Eminem performed on the Grammys two years ago.

Meanwhile, CBS may ask that Jackson and Justin Timberlake be banned from the Grammys if the network concludes the musicians fully intended to give Jackson the extra exposure on Sunday, said a network executive who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Timberlake, who is nominated for five Grammy Awards, is scheduled to perform on Sunday's telecast. Jackson is supposed to present an award.

Man shot in leg; police have no suspects

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 25-year-old Manhattan resident was shot in the leg Wednesday by an unknown shooter. At 2:20 p.m. Wednesday, Riley County Police received a call from 1127 Bluemont Ave. that the victim, Jacob Mendenhall, 1104 Vattier St., had received a gunshot wound.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said Mendenhall was found on the scene with a gunshot wound in the right thigh from a weapon of an unknown caliber.

Moldrup said Mendenhall was walking to Pizza Hut when he was shot. Moldrup said he assumes Mendenhall was walking to the Aggieville location, but that information hasn't been confirmed.

Moldrup said the witness then attempted to transport Mendenhall to the hospital before leaving him at 1127 Bluemont Ave., after realizing the wound was more serious than he had originally thought.

Mendenhall was transported by EMS to Mercy Regional Health Center.

Applications due for student government elections at end of month; students must be in good standing, have full-time status

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elections Chair Michael Pule said students interested in running for student body president, vice president, student senator or any other Student Governing Association position must turn in their applications to the Office of Student Activities and Services by 4 p.m. Feb. 20.

Applications are available in the office.

Gayle Spencer, OSAS coordinator said there is no maximum number of candidates.

"Anyone who is a student in good standing and is currently enrolled as a full-time student may run," Spencer said.

A student in good standing is defined as a student who has a cumulative GPA of more than 2.00, Spencer said.

"Officers are supposed to remain a full-time student while in office," Spencer said.

Vet med students mix social lives with academic duties

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether it's eating lunch together or dissecting animals, the students at the College of Veterinary Medicine spend a lot of time together – about three years.

In those three years, the students get to be almost like family with their classmates, said Sarah Maddox, first-year vet med student.

"You really learn to trust the people around you – they're going to be there for you later on when you've got questions," she said.

Maddox said the people she has met are not only her classmates – they are her friends.

"Pretty soon, your social life begins to mix into your academic life, and sometimes the only way to get through a problem you're having is to talk to those people you're here with every day," Maddox said. "They know you, and they know what's going on in your life."

Sometimes, though, she said she just has to get away.

"When class is over, I'm out of here for at least an hour," she said. "It's tough being here eight hours a day in two rooms."

Even though they have to get away sometimes, students spend a lot of time together outside of school, said Elizabeth McCain, first-year vet med student.

"We'll end up eating meals together a lot of the time – someone will come over and make dinner, and then we'll study together," she said.

Since she's not from Kansas, McCain said she doesn't know many people outside of school.

Massachusetts high court declares gay civil unions not enough, legalizes same-sex marriages

By Jennifer Peter
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON – The Massachusetts high court declared Wednesday gays are entitled to nothing less than marriage and that Vermont-style civil unions will not suffice, setting the stage for the nation's first legally sanctioned same-sex weddings by spring.

The court issued the advisory opinion at the request of legislators who wanted to know whether civil unions would be enough to satisfy the court after its November ruling saying gay couples are entitled to all the rights of marriage. That decision had been written in such a way to leave open the possibility that civil unions might be allowed.

But Wednesday's opinion by the Supreme Judicial Court left no doubt: only marriage would pass constitutional muster.

"The history of our nation has demonstrated that separate is seldom, if ever, equal," four justices wrote. "For no rational reason the marriage laws of the commonwealth discriminate against a defined class; no amount of tinkering with language will eradicate that stain. The (civil unions) bill would have the effect of maintaining and fostering a stigma of exclusion that the Constitution prohibits."

Paul Martinek, editor of Lawyers Weekly USA, said the blunt opinion erases any confusion.

"The fat lady has sung and she's singing the wedding march," Martinek said. "It's clear from reading the majority opinion that there's no basis on which the (court) will OK anything other than marriage."

The much-anticipated opinion came a week before next Wednesday's Constitutional Convention, where the Legislature will consider an amendment backed by Republican Gov. Mitt Romney that would define marriage as a union between a man and a woman.

But the earliest a constitutional amendment could end up on the ballot would be 2006, meaning until then, the high court's decision will be Massachusetts law. Gay couples could get married in Massachusetts as soon as May, the deadline set by the court last fall.

Parking Services hires contractors to clear snow piles from parking lots

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students might love the snow, but they hate it piled in parking lots.

"I just think it's crazy – especially in the Weber lot," Kelly Grant, junior in bakery science said of the snow piled in parking lots.

Shiricia Watson, junior in pre-nursing, said she was frustrated with the piles of snow taking up parking spots, among other things.

"It wasn't clear where the lines were, so people were taking up more than one spot. It seemed like there was a shortage of parking," she said.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said although Parking Services does have vehicles with plows, they aren't capable of taking care of the 11 inches of snow dumped on Manhattan during the weekend.

Therefore, Parking Services hires a contractor to bring large equipment and people who can operate it to clear the snow from the lots.

He said although the crew began clearing the lots at 10 a.m. Monday, the sheer volume of snow, coupled with other distractions, made the job last longer than expected.

"By the time people start coming in to go to work, you're done – shut down," he said. "We had difficulty around the dorms because everyone wanted to play in the snow. We can't plow when that's happening – it's not safe."

Abbott also said areas of campus were more difficult due to narrow entrances of cars parked in ways that made it impossible to plow.

He said the contractors Parking Services hired, which were made up of several different groups from the Manhattan area, also were hired to clear other areas of campus and had to divide time between jobs.

A final wrench was thrown in the process when two loaders broke down Tuesday night, making it impossible for the crew to load and remove the rest of the snow from parking lots.

Abbott said the lots should be cleared for today's classes, as the crew was going to be clearing snow and loading it from the lots Wednesday night, despite additional snowfall.

Despite the decreased number or parking spots, Abbott said tickets were still issued Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The problem is, you still have to park safely," he said.

"We can be understanding, but if you park your car so people can't drive around you, you know you're not being safe. Just use your common sense."

Although he predicted all the snow would be cleared from parking lots today, Abbott said he suggested students plan to take time to find a parking spot if the same situation rises in the future.

"We clear the lots as well as we can," he said. "If our equipment hadn't broken down, it would've all been cleared, but now it's going to take longer, and it's going to be harder. I don't know how to work around those types of things."

Did you know?

Think you were ticketed unfairly?

- Go to Parking Services in Edwards Hall and pick up an appeal form.
- Parking Services takes the appeal form and returns it to the appeals board, which is comprised of faculty, staff and students appointed by various governing boards.
- The board reviews the appeal and rules whether a ticket should have been issued after hearing why Parking Services awarded the ticket as well as driver's reason for parking in the area in question.

Senate building reopens after Monday's ricin scare

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – A Senate rattled by a ricin attack began returning to regular business Wednesday, and the lack of any reported illnesses prompted leaders to plan to reopen office buildings.

Even so, officials continued to say they did not know how the powdery poison arrived Monday in the mailroom of Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn. Frist said he assumed it came in the mail because the powder was found on the tray of a machine his aides use to cut open envelopes.

"There's been no smoking letter information that helps tie this thing together," U.S. Capitol Police Chief Terrance Gainer told reporters.

As lawmakers awaited the test results measuring the ricin's potency, officials said none of the workers who were potentially exposed seemed ill.

The Postal Service said all tests for ricin at its District of Columbia facility that processes congressional mail were negative.

On Wednesday night, a white powder was found on the first floor of the Capitol, but tests for hazardous substances were negative. The building was not evacuate

The Russell building was to reopen Thursday and the Hart building on Friday. Dirksen was to reopen Monday.

Provost interview delayed

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The interview for provost candidate Paula Myrick Short has been postponed for a second time– this time due to weather conditions.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chair of the Provost Selection Committee, said the committee decided to postpone Short's interview after hazardous weather conditions this week.

Her first interview was postponed due to a conflict with Short's schedule.

The interview was scheduled to take place today and Friday, but it has been rescheduled for Feb. 12 and 13.

Another interview is scheduled for Monday and Tuesday Feb. 9 and 10 for M. Duane Nellis, dean of the Eberly College of Arts and Sciences at West Virginia University.

King, Nellis and Short were the three selected finalists for the position.

Reagan said the committee hopes to fill the position by March 1.

The interview process has the candidates meeting with several different groups of people around campus, he said.

To finalize the decision, each of the groups gives its assessment of the three finalists to President Jon Wefald, and he then makes the final decision, Reagan said.

Legalizing gay marriage step toward equality

Americans took a step forward Wednesday in the continuing fight for equal rights.

A Massachusetts high court declared same-sex marriages will be recognized and ordered state law changed immediately. The court said, "The history of our nation has demonstrated that separate is seldom, if ever, equal,"

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

As American society has evolved through history, the government has been forced to examine laws to ensure equality is protected.

Just as the elimination of the separate but equal clause was a victory for racial equality, this court decision begins to close the divide between gay and straight Americans.

All people, regardless of sexual orientation, deserve equal rights. It is astounding that the right to marry your loved one was ever denied in modern-day America.

Eliminating equal treatment cannot be justified by spouting morals or religious beliefs. No matter how government officials feel about the morality of homosexuality, American law should always be based on ensuring civil liberties, rather than taking them away.

The Massachusetts court recognized that the government has an obligation to protect all people, not just the majority. Now we can only hope that a majority of lawmakers and leaders in this nation will recognize the sanctity of this bond and not stand in the way of civil rights.

Strategic replacement

Replacing Vice President Cheney would be smart political move

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

"Now I see change, but inside we're the same as we ever were." – The Kinks

Not since the appointment of Gerald Ford in 1973 has the president of the United States replaced his vice president. It is fitting that, 30 years later, another shady administration is contemplating an executive shake-up.

Following his deification after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani has been rumored as a possible replacement for Vice President Dick Cheney on the 2004 Republican presidential ticket.

Idle talk about Cheney not retaining his spot on the 2004 ticket has gone on in conservative circles long before Giuliani was considered a potential replacement.

Conventional wisdom has shown that Republicans love to run a tight ship with no dissention within the group. President Bush favors followers adherent to mommy's advice: "If you don't have anything nice to say, don't say anything at all."

It seems odd, then, that many GOP-friendly pundits have little or no reservations when talking about finding someone to replace Cheney. Openly discussing a replacement seems a bit off-kilter for modern conservatives.

Republicans never have exhibited much love for Cheney in public, at least not on par with the praise lavished on Bush.

When it comes to discussing the optional war in Iraq, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld fields the majority of the news media inquiries, while Cheney takes most of the criticism. Thus, Rumsfeld is not stuck with the blame for almost 3,000 coalition casualties and at least 8,100 Iraqi civilian casualties, according to the Department of Defense and www.iraqbodycount.org, respectively.

Also, defending Cheney's business ties is much more difficult than talking about his possible replacement. As long as he retains the office, Cheney is a potential scapegoat to wash away any sins committed by the administration.

Replacing Cheney would be a political move of the highest order.

Not only would the administration be able to distance itself from Cheney's unsightly business ties, but his replacement would garner sympathy votes for stepping up for the medically pained vice president.

When it comes to the rumored candidates to replace Cheney, most sources say the list begins and ends with Giuliani.

Rudy certainly seems like the smart choice. He's got a long record of working with minority groups and a distinguished career in public service. He effectively handled the aftermath of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks to the best of his ability – right?

Dead wrong.

Once proclaimed the "Mussolini of the Hudson," Giuliani was one of the undeserving benefactors of the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and was able to mask a lot of the negative history of his mayoral administration when he was named Time magazine's Person of the Year in 2001.

Remembered is Giuliani's cleaning up of Times Square – forgotten is the dictatorial fashion in which signs of poverty and immorality were dispatched.

Conservative pundits likely would label any anti-Giuliani dissenters as unpatriotic or unsympathetic. The irony in this situation is that nominating Giuliani for vice president would be one of the biggest political exploitations of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Bush recently used the State of the Union address to rail against equal rights for homosexuals, and Sen. Rick Santorum could back up that policy stance.

Quoted during an Associated Press interview, Santorum said equality of rights for homosexuals "destroys the basic unit of our society."

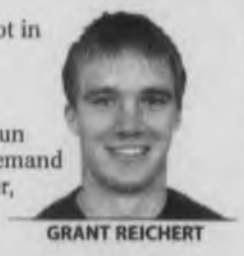
Bush also praises GOP members who can rally average Americans against the judicial system – Gov. Bill Owens of Colorado fits the bill. After the Rev. Michael Newdow caused controversy over the Pledge of Allegiance, Owens signed a bill to require the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance. Owens is no stranger to "The O'Reilly Factor," where he chastises civil libertarians and judges who issue left-of-center decisions.

National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice's name is also floated around as a suggested Cheney replacement. Rice has been a GOP darling with ties back to Ronald Reagan.

The conservative administration could attempt a major move to the center by nominating a female minority to the vice presidency.

There would be no doubt as to who the Republican Party plans to push for president in 2008 if Rice lands a spot on Bush's ticket.

While Cheney being out of office certainly would appease many Americans, it would be an empty gesture unless someone worthy of the office was nominated to replace him.



Such a pleasant surprise does not seem to be in store for voters this year.

Runners need tight shorts, loud music

GRANT REICHERT

Runners unite– but not in any formal group. That would just be stupid.

We've been heckled, looked down upon and run over long enough. We demand the respect we're due – er, well, maybe a little bit more than that.

Although right now we runners are about as useful as kidney stones, it's pretty obvious all of the wars of the 21st century are going to be fought by those of us fast enough to run away from our sentient robotic/monkey overlords.

The world is gonna need us runners.

Besides, running is also good for you. According to Einstein's Theory of Relativity, people who run a lot live longer than those who don't, and also have more relatives.

Even though the health benefits of running have been scientifically proven by people even more eccentric than myself, it still takes a certain kind of person to make themselves run every day. We are those certain kinds of people.

It takes someone who doesn't realize any years added to their life as a result of jogging are more than offset by the time wasted actually jogging. We are they.

It takes a person who can keep going even after their heart is beating like a hummingbird on crack, their feet are bloody, swollen sausages, and they feel like an alien is ready to burst out of their gut Sigourney-style. Yes, we are they.

It takes a person who can entertain themselves for miles on end merely by alternating each foot in front of the other at a slightly quickened pace. We are they.

But really, running isn't as bad as most people make it out to be. It's such a simple pastime anyone can enjoy.

All you need is a good pair of shoes ($90) so you don't ruin your knees and a pair of incredibly short, tight and revealing running shorts ($50) so you can keep the boys in line and air-conditioned.

These shorts also can cause passing motorists to avert their gaze in horror or risk hysterical blindness/turning to stone. You also need an MP3 player ($150), so you don't get left alone with just your deepest, most schizoid thoughts.

I did this once, and before long I had convinced myself I was merely a hollow construct stuffed with almonds, pecans and cashews.

Everyone said I was crazy, but I was just nuts.

The music you choose to play should be pulse-quickening, eardrum-shattering, "devil" music. Something that will really get you hopped up and ready to go. You should be so overcome when you start to run that you can't help but burst into song, "Hit me baby one more time!"

If you have masculinity issues – obviously, most runners don't – with listening to the inimitable Spears, then 'N Sync will substitute fine.

Currently, as most meteorologists would tell you, we are experiencing a uniform weather phenomenon known in most meteorological circles as "winter." And during "winter," the weather tends to be "cold."

Obviously, this doesn't lend itself very well to a sprint across town, unless you wish to soon be parted with a few extremities. Don't worry about the cold, though; all you need to do is adopt the attitude that most runners have. Say it with me now: "I'll just run tomorrow."

Congratulations. Shave your legs and start drinking Gatorade mixed half-and-half with water: you're one of us now. You could try running, but that will only prove our point.

Hey, Collegian, how much did Ultimate Fakebook pay you to be in every article in the Edge this week?

I'm graduating college in four years with two degrees, and trust me, I'm definitely living it up.

Commissioner Brad Everett should not be upset that his family was exposed to a boob during the Super Bowl halftime show. They see one every day when they look at him.

Wasn't "Buffy" the show for girls who stayed in on Friday nights and never got kissed during high school?

For anyone who wants Wooldridge fired, just remember how bad Asbury was.

Hey, building users, chill out! We custodians are doing the best we can. If your trash isn't getting picked up when you want, or your office isn't getting vacuumed, get a real life and look outside and see what we've been doing outside.

What now, Mayor Taussig? Gay marriage in Massachusetts.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Students need to respect city

Editor,

I am a parent of a 4-year-old boy who gets very excited when it snows. He cannot wait until the Hill, CiCo Park, has enough snow to sled. We also have 11 kids under the age of 9 in our neighborhood who also cannot wait to sled.

Unfortunately, and I say this with disappointment, there were college students who also could not wait until the Hill had enough snow to sled. These college students did not have respect for the children or the city, which puts up pads and allows us to sled on city property.

This is a privilege I want my son to have for years to come. This is why I need to bring up the abuse that the college students of K-State brought to the Hill.

Monday was a mad house, as expected, but I did not expect drinking, obnoxious college students to deface the property of the Hill.

Monday was a mad house, as expected, but I did not expect drinking, obnoxious college students to deface the property of the hill.

These college students left one of the largest messes I have ever seen. There were broken doors, multiple air mattresses, plastic and wood debris, beer cans and plastic garbage bags all over the Hill. The pads that are put up for protection, were pulled off the pool fence, and one of the pads was stolen.

The most difficult thing to explain to my son on Tuesday, when we went back, was that mess.

I was so busy picking up debris and putting it in piles that I did not have a lot of time to play with my son.

I did not want to leave the mess, in fear we might lose our privilege as a community to use the Hill.

Please let it be known that the Hill is a privilege, not a right, and I would like to keep it that way for years and kids to come.

So, let us all try to have fun and also to have respect for the city and the children of Manhattan.

Russia serves as adviser to America's future

TAMMY JO OSBORN

When you think Russia, you think Kremlin.

At least, for me, the golden domes and Red Square always were the shining symbols of that mysterious land across the sea. It took me a while to really understand I was standing within its red brick walls.

My dream that had spanned the majority of my life – from the moment I heard of the Berlin Wall's destruction to the action of stepping off the plane on Moscow soil – was finally realized.

Here, beneath my feet, stood centuries of history.

The dynamic difference between an empire titled the "Third Rome" and the patriotism I feel for a 200-year-old Constitution is the same comparison of the wisdom of a grandparent to the stumblings of her young grandchild.

Although many ceremonies here drip with the heavy influence of a powerful past, often losing their import, I have found the crucial importance of their existence is something we should take into account.

The knowledge, power and wisdom behind any practice offers gems of incredible wealth any determined miner will find.

As I viewed the incredible wealth of the Russian Empire, displayed throughout the many museums in the Kremlin, I realized the beauty in every twist of carved wood and in every thread of fine embroidery was a reflection of the immense troves of treasure we have lost sight of in today's society.

We erect buildings in days instead of years, and although that may be necessary, we have lost the ability to put time and beauty into those constructions.

Life is cold and gray, instead of a masterpiece created out of the materials available to us every day.

We have lost the gift of history, and with it, the beauty that could empower us.

We make decisions based on the here and now instead of looking to history as an important adviser.

Like a locomotive, we steam straight ahead, assured our path cannot be the wrong one and we should, and can, ignore the concern in the voice of our past.

We want to believe our path is the right one and to continue in our ignorance of what the history of any nation could provide for us. American history stands in dark contrast to the history of Russia, and I believe we could learn much if we understood the effects of this reality.

The beauty we will encounter when getting in touch with a past forgotten in a corner of our attic, will enthrall us with its effects if we learn to listen.

I never knew when I entered the Kremlin and listened to the story of its history that I would feel so lost and sad – lost because I was struggling to place myself in a world that was older than I had understood it to be – sad because the beauty around me is no longer produced.

We can no longer afford to ignore the treasure trove of history.

It is a teacher we should stop trying to silence and an adviser every leader should be attuned to. Being here in Moscow is not only a dream achieved, it is the realization that my initial dream was a naive one.

I do not need to be on Russian soil to have the world at my fingertips.

The world is in textbooks, the histories of elders, libraries and the stories behind each action we perform in our daily lives.

We only need to seek and we shall find.

After slow start, Wildcat men's offense sparks win

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's team snapped its three-game losing streak Wednesday, beating Nebraska, 78-61.

The Wildcats (10-8, 2-5) got off to a slow start in the first half, falling behind 12-4 to the Cornhuskers (11-7, 1-6) in the first four minutes.

After a quick timeout by Coach Jim Wooldridge, the Wildcats went on a 12-0 run. Led by junior forward Jeremiah Massey, who went 3-of-4 from the field during the stretch, K-State took its first lead of the game and never looked back.

"We played better offense and found a variety of ways to score the ball," Wooldridge said. "We had some guys jump up and make some plays."

With 6:02 left in the first half, the Cornhuskers came to within four, 27-23. Senior guard Jarrett Hart then caught fire, and hit a jumper and a 3-pointer to push the lead to nine, 32-23 with 3:54 left to play.

Massey would hit another jumper with :56 on the clock and the Wildcats went into the locker room leading 35-29.

K-State held the second best shooting team in the Big 12 to only 33 percent from the field in the first half.

"We get energy off of our defense, and we played off of that all night," Hart said.

In the second half, the Wildcats used its 2-3 zone defense to smother Nebraska.

"We played a lot of zone defense in the second half and took away their penetration game," Wooldridge said.

For the game, K-State held Nebraska to 32 percent from the field and 24 percent from beyond the three-point line.

"We just came out feeling good and we played together as a team," Massey said.

Cats snap losing streak with good shooting

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even Coach Jim Wooldridge was surprised.

In Wednesday night's 78-61 win over the Nebraska Cornhuskers at Bramlage Coliseum, the K-State men put on a shooting display not seen in Wildcat- land in some time.

The Wildcats shot a blistering 63 percent from the field – the highest field-goal percentage in the Wooldridge era.

"You've seen us," Wooldridge said, referring to prior dismal shooting performances by his team. "It's hard to explain."

Not since shooting 61 percent against Texas-Pan American on Dec. 12, 2002, have the Wildcats been so efficient putting the ball in the basket.

Several Wildcats led the offensive charge.

One was junior forward Jeremiah Massey, who scored a career-high 24 points on 8-of-12 shooting.

Several of Massey's buckets came on aggressive drives to the hole.

"I was just trying to go out, play strong and not look to a ref for a foul like I usually do," Massey said.

Senior guards Jarrett Hart and Tim Ellis also provided an offensive spark for the Wildcats, contributing 16 points each.

The game was Hart's fifth straight in double-figures, while Ellis was a perfect 6-of-6 from the floor in the second half – including 3-of-3 from outside the arc.

Hart knows having multiple players step up and score is huge for his team.

"We can't just have one or two scorers," Hart said.

Wooldridge also said he was pleased with the point distribution, as K-State put nine players in the scoring column.

"Tonight we had more balance, more pop at the offensive end," Wooldridge said. "I think we got some really good looks at the basket and found ways to score the ball. We had some guys jump up and make plays."

The only negative for the Wildcat offense was a familiar nemesis – turnovers.

However, the shooting performance more than compensated for the poor ball-handling.

"We made some mistakes but covered them up," Hart said.

The 78 point score by the Wildcats was their highest point total since scoring 92 against Savannah State on Jan. 10 and their best scoring effort against a Big 12 team this season.

As the Wildcats prepare for Saturday's road contest against Colorado, the question remains whether their hot-shooting against Nebraska will be the exception rather than the rule for the rest of the year.

To Hart, the key is persistence.

"I don't think anything changed," he said. "It's one of those things – one night you're on, one night you're off. You just got to keep shooting."

Recent snowfall gives students chance to make sledding an extreme sport

Broken bones, numb fingers don't deter columnist from hitting the slopes

WES MARFIELD

Break out the beanies, ladies and gentlemen; sledding season is upon us.

In one of the worst snow storms I've seen in recent years, there is little to do on a rare day off of school besides what can be one of the most extreme sports.

On Sunday, with snow falling faster than Janet Jackson's morals, I could hardly wait to hit the fresh powder. The huge hill at my house made me only that much more excited.

See, I really didn't care much about this year's Super Bowl. I tried to watch the first half, but found myself bored out of my skull. Aside from the now infamous halftime show, the game lacked luster at that point.

So I went outside to hit the slopes.

Ramps were constructed, sleds were coated with cooking oil and Chevy Chase was going to be outdone. And someone was bound to get hurt.

And if you still think sledding isn't a sport, you try ramping onto a street in freezing weather, face caked with snow, and then making the long hike back to the summit.

As Sunday drew to a close, we could only pray school wouldn't be in session. And we apparently missed the greatest Super Bowl in recent memory.

With an afternoon that would feature no classes to attend, things got a little wild.

A rail was built out of a 2-by-4 for the mini snowboard, an icy 7-foot high ramp was constructed, and inner tubes were purchased from a local gas station.

A good four hours were spent outside that day with excited boys and girls flying down the hill like they belonged in the X-Games.

One of the highlights was seeing four guys pile on top of an inner tube. The top man always wound up with a face full of snow and a story to tell his grandchildren.

But, like all good things, our day of glory came to an end. One broken collarbone and countless numb fingers later, we headed inside for the warmth of home.

Classes resumed the next day, and sledding was forced to play second fiddle to actual work. Imagine that.

But the sledding forecast is looking good for the next couple of days, with more snow expected.

Will we break out the toys again if several more inches of powder grace our yard?

That remains to be seen.

But no one, present company included, will ever forget his or her first snow day in college.

And if the sledding gods are looking down upon the students of K-State, it won't be our last.

CBB | K-State women win against Iowa State

For a team that lives and dies by the 3-point shot, No. 10 K-State found life anywhere but the perimeter and made it three in a row as the Wildcats beat the Iowa State Cyclones, 61-47.

Although they started, junior guard Laurie Koehn and senior forward Amy Dutmer sat out most of the game as freshmen guards Twiggy McIntyre and Claire Coggins got plenty of playing time.

NCAA | Public address announcer for KU retires

Howard Hill, public address announcer for University of Kansas football and men's basketball games since 1982, will retire this weekend. He'll do his last game Saturday, when the Jayhawks play Texas Tech.

Hill will be replaced by Hank Booth, who has served as Hill's backup and as the announcer for the university's marching band for the past decade.

Track | Jones set to compete for first time since '02

Marion Jones is ready to start her track career again. That could mean bad news for the rest of her competitors.

Jones

Jones will run in the 60 meters Friday at the Millrose Games, her first competition in more than a year since taking a leave to have a baby. Though she hardly ever competes during the indoor season, Jones wanted to get her return underway to prepare for the Olympics this summer.

Jones will face a top-notch field, including teenage sensation Allyson Felix. Last June, Felix broke Jones' 200-meter high school record, finishing in 22.52 seconds.

MLB | Burks takes Red Sox physical, could re-sign

Burks' agent, Jim Turner, confirmed Wednesday that his client took the physical. Turner said he wanted to wait for the results before publicly discussing his client's talks with the Red Sox.

Burks, 39, played six seasons in Boston after being selected as the team's No. 1 draft pick in 1983. He was an All-Star and Gold Glove outfielder in 1990, three years after making his big league debut. He left the team as a free agent after the 1992 season, when the Red Sox declined to re-sign him because of concerns about his back.

NBA | Judge: William's prior gun incidents not relevant

A state judge on Wednesday refused to allow prosecutors in the Jayson Williams manslaughter trial to introduce evidence that the retired NBA star killed his dog with a shotgun, and then ordered a witness at gunpoint to bury the animal.

Williams

Superior Court Judge Edward M. Coleman also declined to permit the jury to hear about a pistol discharge at the Meadowlands sports complex that resulted in Williams being ordered to make speeches and place advertisements warning of mixing alcohol and firearms.

The defense had opposed the two-pronged motion, saying introducing the evidence would be prejudicial and inflammatory.

The judge noted the dog incident would be very likely to inflame the jury against Williams.

Passionella, played by Dianne Paukstelis, Manhattan resident, works through a scene during rehearsal at the Manhattan Arts Center on Tuesday night. "The Apple Tree" will play Feb 20-22 and 27-29. The cast and crew of these plays rely heavily on volunteers from the K-State and Manhattan communities who enjoy being involved in the arts.

Local actors, arts enthusiasts volunteer time, skills

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some students have it tough, because they have to balance school and work.

Other students balance school and work for no money.

Local visual and performing arts institutions need to have volunteers to make ends meet, and volunteering is a good opportunity to give back to the community, as well as get experience, Brian Winkleman, graduate in theater, said.

He said the time he's spent contributing to the set design for the Manhattan Art Center's production of the musical, "The Apple Tree," has been rewarding.

"I've spent a lot of time here and at home on set design," Winkleman said. "I've also put in quite a bit of time in man hours with four weekends of time with some nine-to-four shifts getting floors laid. We have two more weekends, and I'll come in at other times and do some painting."

Finding time to work on designs and build sets isn't the only problem, Winkleman said. He said that sometimes it's hard to find people to recruit.

"The hardest aspect of volunteering is finding others to help," Winkleman said. "Like Sunday, it snowed 8 inches; we had a set to build, and I had to plow.

"It's hard enough to be plowing outside, but then we were stuck with three people doing seven people's work. But the few who do come want to be there, and it makes working with them even better."

"Some of our volunteers do it because they have an interest in theater. Most of our volunteers do it to help the community. We're a volunteer-driven organization, so we can't do what we do without them."

Penny Senften
MANHATTAN ARTS CENTER DIRECTOR

The Manhattan Arts Center tries to find jobs fitting students' interests, said Penny Senften, executive director for the center. There are several different jobs available to volunteers.

"Sometimes it varies on what we need," Senften said. "We always need help for the plays and musicals we do each year.

"We have big work days, like recently we had a big painting project. We also have some people who work on the MAC truck. It just depends on what you want to do."

Senften said they send e-mails about upcoming work to volunteers interested in working.

She said not every student is a theater major.

"Some of our volunteers do it because they have an interest in theater," Senften said. "Most of our volunteers do it to help the community. We're a volunteer-driven organization, so we can't do what we do without them."

The McCain Ambassadors, the volunteer group for McCain Auditorium, has several students who work on different projects, said Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain.

"You'd be amazed at all they do," Jackson said.

"They do everything from ushering, to help hand out advertising, to help cater to some of the artists that perform, to helping the stage crew."

Jackson said there are all types of volunteers with different reasons for volunteering.

"Some of them are just philanthropic," Jackson said. "Some enjoy the arts. Some find it fun. They get to watch some of the performances while they work, some meet artists, some famous. Plus, it's something to do outside of school. It's a very social thing.

"We like to cater to our volunteers. We have some that work once a month, others that work three to four times a week. It's a wide variety."

Another organization that thrives because of its volunteers is the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor for the museum.

"We have a whole organization, the Student Friends of the Beach Museum of Art, that helps assist us," Schlageck said. "They help assist with fund-raisers, like the Valentine's Day workshop on Feb. 8, as well as family days and open house days.

"They help with several different workshops and serve as hosts and hostesses," Schlageck said.

She said the support they receive from their volunteers prompted them to create the volunteer organization. She said the Student Friends of the Beach Museum of Art was created three years ago.

"We didn't know what to expect at first, but now we have a group of 30-35 volunteers," Schlageck said.

First-time volunteer and choreographer for the Manhattan Arts Center production of "The Apple Tree," Amy Hurrelbrink, senior in dance, said volunteering for the arts center has been a great experience.

"It's interesting to be able to collaborate with different people, in theater and dance, that I normally wouldn't get to do," she said.

"I've never choreographed for a show before, and it's different to balance seeing everyone's artistic vision and bringing it all together," Hurrelbrink said.

She said she originally volunteered for the job, but later found it worked into her senior project.

She said they've been working since before the break and are excited for the upcoming opening.

Winkleman said he thinks it is rewarding to juggle between either school or work and volunteering. He said that in his case, the experience is well worth it.

"With the smaller atmosphere here, you get closer to people you work with," Winkleman said. "You develop relationships and contacts that are important in the work world.

"In my case, I graduated in theater, and I'm doing it for the pure enjoyment. However, it is also something I can add to my résumé for any future jobs as a set or costume designer. So it can go a long way."

Blake breaks into song outside courtroom

Actor Robert Blake, charged with one count of murder and two counts of solicitation for murder in an investigation of the death of his wife, broke into song when he left a Van Nuys, Calif., courtroom earlier this week.

Blake was serenaded by a man with a guitar outside, who suggested Blake give the instrument a try. Blake, who has played guitar since he was a child, did his best Judy Garland impersonation in singing "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

Blake

That same day, Superior Court Judge Darlene Schempp upheld her decision to keep a majority of Blake's trial untelevised.

Other Blake case updates include allegations by Blake's lawyer that Blake's wife was killed by the son of the late Marlon Brando.

Brown files for marriage annulment from 3rd wife

Soulman James Brown filed for an annulment of his marriage to third wife Tommie Rae Brown, earlier this week. Brown claimed she was legally married to another man, her previous husband, whom she married in 1997.

Brown

Brown found himself in the media spotlight last week when he was arrested on a domestic violence charge. He allegedly threw Tommie Rae to the ground and threatened to kill her. The maximum penalty for Brown is a $500 fine and a month in prison.

The couple is divided in age by an entire generation: she is 33, and he is 70.

Wedding bells ring for 'Blonde' actress Blair

Actress Selma Blair and Ahmet Zappa were married late last month in front of a crowd of 70, E! Online recently reported.

Blair

The pair became involved in a whirlwind romance six months ago and were married at the Beverly Hills home of "Star Wars" actress Carrie Fisher.

Blair's most recent and arguably most popular film project was a co-starring role in the movie "Legally Blonde" with Reese Witherspoon.

Shriver bids farewell to NBC job for now

Shriver

Shriver cited a desire to pay more attention to her duties as first lady of California as her reason for quitting. Shriver is the wife of California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who was sworn into office in November.

NBC has said it gladly will bring Shriver back to its team once her husband's term in office ends. Both NBC and Shriver agreed there were too many issues of objectivity at stake to allow Shriver to properly continue her work.

New program ushers classrooms into digital age

Video classes bring K-State to home PCs

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gina Mastin is a K-State graduate student, but you won't see her on campus.

In fact, you won't even see her in Manhattan.

Due to the improvements in TELENET 2 courses – a university video-conferencing program that allowing students to interact with a professor and each other at an off-campus site – Mastin is able to attend K-State even though she spends her weekdays working in Nebraska.

K-State introduced four TELENET 2 courses this semester, three more courses than the fall semester. Three courses are taught on the Manhattan campus, while the other is taught at K-State-Salina.

Mastin said she is using the TELENET 2 option, because it works better with her schedule than other options she considered.

"I am working on my doctorate of education," she said. "I guess the long-term goal is to become a professor."

Sue White, coordinator for TELENET 2, said currently there are no certificates or diplomas awarded when a student takes only TELENET 2 courses.

White said this option could be a possibility in the future.

His teaching style, he said, was altered because of the technology involved in the class.

"I learned that compared to an on-campus class I need to have the students doing more talking and provide opportunity for critical thinking activities," he said.

Oaklief said the TELENET 2 courses, compared to the older version, are more advanced.

"It's a lot better now than it used to be," he said.

"Technology has changed enough to make it a good learning environment."

One change, he said, is that he is able to now see all of the students taking a class, a big change from before, when he could not interact face-to-face with them.

Oaklief said although the system has improved, the university still has far to go before being where it wants to be.

"We're in the first quarter," he said. "Our university seems to be at the early stages of serving the potential group of learners through distance technology."

White said she hopes the program grows more and becomes established as a distance-learning program in future years as K-State works with other universities.

"One of the things we are going to see is more variety and becoming part of the mix," she said.

Suspect being questioned in abduction of 11-year-old Florida girl

By Mitch Stacy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARASOTA, Fla.– A suspect was being questioned Wednesday in the disappearance of an 11-year-old girl apparently kidnapped while walking home from a friend's house, authorities said. The girl's whereabouts were not immediately known.

Joseph P. Smith, 37, was in custody on unrelated charges that officials did not specify. His car, a Buick Century station wagon, was being searched by investigators in a search for clues in the disappearance of Carlie Brucia, whose apparent abduction was captured by a car wash surveillance camera.

"We have strong evidence that he is in fact the perpetrator," said Capt. Jeff Bell, the lead Sarasota County sheriff's investigator on the case.

Col. Terry Lewis called it an "ongoing, dynamic investigation." He said his team will continue working through the night, but would not have further comment until a press briefing Thursday morning.

Sheriff Bill Balkwill said investigators were led to Smith after a tip was phoned in by a citizen. Smith has been arrested at least 13 times in Florida since 1993, according to state records. He was arrested in 1997 by Manatee County officials on kidnapping and false imprisonment charges, but was acquitted a year later, records show. Other arrests range from misdemeanor battery to felony drug possession charges, records show.

Surveillance video cameras captured images of Brucia, a sixth-grader, apparently being kidnapped while taking a shortcut behind a closed car wash on her way home.

A security camera shot a sequence of digital photographs of a man walking up to her, talking to her, grasping her arm and leading her away.The man appeared to be in his late 20s or early 30s in a mechanic's shirt with a name patch on one lapel. Investigators said he also had tattoos on both forearms.

Smith has tattoos on his body, including on both arms, officials said.

From the photos, Carlie did not appear to know him, and the girl's parents said they did not recognize him.

The FBI worked with a NASA image lab to enhance the images. Balkwill did not say whether those enhanced images helped lead them to Smith.

Friends from the girl's former Girl Scout troop took a day off from school Wednesday to pass out fliers at malls, canvass neighborhoods and distribute pink ribbons adorned with Carlie's name.

Many people pulled up to the site of the abduction, rolled down the windows of their cars and asked deputies how they could help. Officials were creating "a database of volunteer support" to try to locate the girl.

The girl's father, Joe Brucia, looked exhausted when he appeared on national television Wednesday morning.

"I'm doing OK. I have to be for Carlie's sake," he said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

"I always have hope. I maintain that. I have to. I look forward to my daughter's safe return."

Meanwhile, after speaking with a psychic, Carlie's family hired a private investigator to assist in the search. Chuck Chambers, a private investigator from neighboring Bradenton, said Carlie's family hired him Tuesday after consulting with an "investigative psychic" who "provided them with addresses and clues."

Steven Kansler, Carlie's stepfather, said the family was encouraged because the psychic feels Carlie is still alive, but is "somewhere dark and tied up."

Carlie's family is frustrated at times, but remains hopeful the girl is coming home.

"I know Carlie is a strong-willed person," Kansler said. "She's full of life and she's not going to give up."

MARRIAGE | Massachusetts declares gay marriages constitutional

"We're going to have to start looking for a band," said Ed Balmelli, who put down a deposit for a wedding after the opinion.

The case represents a significant milestone in a year that has seen broad new recognitions of gay rights, including a June U.S. Supreme Court decision striking down a Texas ban on gay sex.

The White House called the Massachusetts ruling "deeply troubling."

"Activist judges continue to seek to redefine marriage by court order, without regard for the will of the people," Bush's spokesman Scott McClellan said.

The legal battle in Massachusetts began in 2001, when seven gay couples went to their city halls to obtain marriage licenses. All were denied.

The Supreme Judicial Court ruled in November that gay couples have a constitutional right to marry.

The state Senate asked for more guidance from the court.

"The dissimilitude between the terms civil marriage' and civil union' is not innocuous; it is a considered choice of language that reflects a demonstrable assigning of same-sex, largely homosexual, couples to second-class status," the justices wrote.

At least one aspect of the case may still be subject to debate: would marriages in Massachusetts have to be recognized in other states?

Conservative leaders said they would redouble their efforts to pass the constitutional ban on same-sex marriages.

"This now puts the pressure back on the Legislature to do their job to protect and defend marriage for the citizens of the state to allow them to vote," said Ron Crews, president of the Massachusetts Family Institute.

Spencer said if students were unable to make it to the office to get an application, they are also available online.

According to the OSAS Web site, there are several restrictions on student campaigns.

Candidates are required to attend one of at least two mandatory meetings by 5 p.m. Feb. 24.

"Any election complaints caused by a suspected violation of the code must be filed with the elections commissioner within one day after discovery of the suspected violation. Complaints shall be made in such a form that states the name of the filer, the section(s) under which the suspected violation shall have occurred, and shall be signed by the filer," according to the website.

Major offenses include, but are not limited to, tampering with ballots or other election equipment, casting more than one ballot, deliberate submission of false or misleading information, deliberate omission or intentionally failing to file required reports, intimidating bribery or fraud and libel/slander.

Candidates can be disqualified for committing a major offense, but the decision rests with the elections chair.

Vet Med maintains strict admission policies

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Veterinary Medicine is not like most other colleges at K-State.

Many of the admission requirements are different and more difficult. Only a certain number of students are accepted each year.

The college is a professional school, which means the school has a capped enrollment, Ralph Richardson, dean of the college, said.

"There's intense competition to be entered into the college and extensive prerequisites, which makes it more like graduate education than undergraduate education," he said.

Students who enter the vet med program are usually in their mid-20s, Richardson said.

The average entering student has had 4.7 years of undergraduate education, he said, while 75 to 80 percent of students have completed their undergraduate degrees.

Ron Elmore, associate dean of the college, said the college has between 500 and 550 qualified applications each year.

"For every student who gets in, there's three or four who didn't," he said. "The competition is fairly intense."

To be qualified, the student must have at least a 2.8 GPA on his or her past 45 hours of undergraduate work, at least a 2.8 GPA on the college's required prerequisites and finish all required prerequisites by the spring semester.

After all qualified applications have been accepted, the applicants are broken into three groups, depending on where they are from, and the elimination process begins.

Elmore said each year the college takes 50 students from Kansas, 25 from Nebraska, and 33 from other applicants, including a small number of foreign students.

To determine the selection of qualified applicants, other criteria are looked at through a process of a ranking score.

The student's score on the graduate record examination is 40 percent of his ranking score, while the science GPA is 30 percent. The remaining 30 percent consists of the student's animal experience, veterinary experience, the interview, letters of reference and other items.

When applying to the college, students need to be prepared to either be accepted and work hard or be rejected and try again, said Jennifer McCallum, first-year vet med student.

"You can't have gone through undergrad and not really done your best and then expect to get in," she said. "I think the admission requirements are fair. A lot of people apply more than once, and there's nothing wrong with that."

If the admission requirements were any more lax, McCallum said students who are admitted wouldn't be prepared.

"You would have too many people dropping out once they're here," she said. "In undergrad, you may have worked really hard, but here, you're going to have to work even harder."

"I did my undergrad in Maine, so most of my friends are still there," she said. "Everyone here has been great – they're so welcoming and nice."

Judy Klimek, associate professor of anatomy and physiology, said she agrees the atmosphere at vet med is family-like.

"They have to work in groups and work out personal differences, just like any other family where you have different personalities and everyone has to learn to be constructive with one another," Klimek said.

Ralph Richardson, dean for the College of Veterinary Medicine, said the college has a standardized curriculum for all four years, which means students must pass the first semester before they can begin the next semester.

As a result, the same students are together in a classroom and labs for the first three years of the four-year professional program.

Because of this, students develop strong working relationships, Richardson said.

"Class size is 108 students per year, and they carry an average of 20 credit hours per semester," he said. "That means they are in class for over 35 clock hours per week – it's like going to a full-time job with the same people every day."

In their fourth year, students continue to work closely, even though some may be apart, Richardson said.

Students aren't the only ones who feel like a family. Klimek said students feel close to the faculty members as well.

"I have always felt like students and faculty have good relationships," she said. "They don't complain much as a group, and they have good working relationships, which the culture of the college."

Investigation reveals man shot himself

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Further investigation into Wednesday's incident in which Jacob Mendenhall, Manhattan resident, was shot in the thigh– revealed Mendenhall accidentally discharged a handgun, which resulted in the wound to his leg, Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said.

RCPD initially was notified of the shooting at 2:17 p.m. Wednesday, as mendenhall was in front of Rickels' Liquor at 1127 Bluemont Ave.

Mendenhall first told the police he had been confronted by an unknown black male while walking in the 300 or 400 block of Moro Street. Mendenhall claimed the individual had shot him in the right thigh and robbed him of cash.

After further investigation, Mendenhall off at Rickel's Liquor, it was found that the two individuals had been traveling in the subject's 1995 Buick Riviera when the victim accidentally discharged the handgun.

Detectives seized the subject's vehicle for evidence and were able to locate the weapon, which was later reported stolen in a recent residential burglary, according to an RCPD press release.

At this time, no arrests have been made, but RCPD officials anticipate the case will be forwarded to the prosecutor for consideration of charges naming Mendenhall as a suspect.

Ricin investigation yields no leads

Law enforcement officials search for source of Capitol Hill ricin

By Curt Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Investigators expanded their search Thursday for the source of ricin discovered on Capitol Hill after intensive testing of a Senate office mailroom failed to turn up the deadly poison's origin.

The ricin was discovered in Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist's office. Law enforcement officials say no letter or note has been found indicating how it got there, who was behind it and whether the Tennessee Republican was the target.

"We're not at the point in time where we can say how it was delivered," said Michael Mason, assistant FBI director in charge of the Washington field office. "We have not found a hot letter."

Mail has been the primary focus of the probe since Monday, when an intern found a small amount of ricin on a mail-sorting machine in Frist's office. But no further ricin or other evidence was in the stacks of letters nearby.

Because no answers have come from mail or items in the mailroom, investigators now must consider if the ricin was placed on the machine by someone or if it had spilled out of an older letter and been there for a long time. If so, investigators would have to trace the paths of these older letters, some of which may have been destroyed.

"We are taking a look at every possible angle," Mason said.

The discovery prompted the closure of three Senate office buildings, two of which reopened Thursday, and decontamination procedures for staff and Capitol police officers who were at the scene. Ricin is a highly toxic substance with no known antidote.

Afternoon classes canceled Thursday

By Oksana Boyko
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To learn his afternoon class had been canceled, Andrew Null, junior in biology, had to come to campus.

"I wish they would have done that in the morning to save confusion," said Null, who was going home at 2:15 p.m. Null said he usually finds out about class cancellations from his friends, but Thursday, this system apparently hit the skids.

K-State closed its Manhattan campus at 2 p.m. due to the snowfall in the morning and expected fall of the temperature in the evening.

The only employees who remained at work were those involved with housing, feeding and safety of students and campus buildings.

Director says search teams need more time to find WMDs

By Katherine Pfleger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In his first public defense of prewar intelligence, CIA Director George Tenet said Thursday that U.S. analysts had never claimed Iraq was an imminent threat, the main argument used by President Bush for going to war.

Tenet said analysts had varying opinions on the state of Iraq's chemical, biological and nuclear weapons programs and those differences were spelled out in the October 2002 National Intelligence Estimate given to the White House. That report summarized intelligence on Iraq's weapons programs.

Analysts "painted an objective assessment for our policy makers of a brutal dictator who was continuing his efforts to deceive and build programs that might constantly surprise us and threaten our interests, " he said in a speech at Georgetown University.

"No one told us what to say or how to say it," Tenet said.

In the months before the war, Bush and his top aides repeatedly stressed the urgency of stopping Saddam Hussein. In a Sept. 12 speech to the United Nations, he called Saddam's regime "a grave and gathering danger." The next day, he told reporters that Saddam was "a threat that we must deal with as quickly as possible."

Tenet said U.S. intelligence accurately reported that Saddam's regime posed a danger. Though no weapons of mass destruction have been uncovered in Iraq, he said the search isn't over.

HOW TO

Stay awake in class

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In order to learn anything in class, we must stay awake and be alert.

Sometimes, staying awake in class is difficult, especially if watching grass grow is more interesting than the material covered that day.

Here are some useful tips for staying awake in class.

SLEEP, SLEEP AND MORE SLEEP

Sleep is very important to learning and remembering subject material. In order to retain everything you just learned, getting plenty of rest is the key.

Besides, sleeping in those creaky desk chairs is pretty uncomfortable.

EAT LIGHT

Eating a big meal right before class can cause you to feel sleepy. Try to avoid eating big, heavy meals right before classes, and drink cold drinks to give yourself a quick pick-me-up.

MOVE AROUND

If your class is so long that the professor rewards you with a five-minute break, take advantage of it. Get up and walk around or go outside.

STAY COOL

When you walk into class, especially in winter, remove your jacket and, if the room feels like you are inside the very center of hell, crack a window or turn down the heat.

If you do fall asleep, make sure you have someone near you who's not afraid to jab you in the side to wake you up.

Increased enrollment fills classrooms to near capacity

By Leigh Ochsner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Due to increased enrollment and demolition work at Denison Hall, a number of classrooms this semester are reaching capacity.

Kim Jackson, room scheduling specialist, said this semester she lost six general-use classrooms totaling more than 550 seats because of the demolition work at Denison.

In addition, she said she lost four classrooms when Ackert Hall was renovated.

So far, none of the 10 rooms have been replaced.

As a result, classes were scheduled in the K-State Student Union for the first time because of lack of space.

General chemistry's spring enrollment is 232 students and is located in Willard 114, which has 233 seats.

But on the first day of school, Yasmin Patell, assistant professor of chemistry, said students were standing with empty seats around.

"There was a seat available," Patell said. "I don't know why they didn't sit down."

Jackson said departments determine class size based on how large of a class an instructor wants to teach. Each department has its own classroom, she said, which may be used by other departments.

If the cap, or number of students permitted to enroll in a class, is set at 48, Jackson said the class will not be located in a room that seats less than 48.

The problems are with classes where the professor only allows a small number of students.

"The only reason that students would be sitting on the floor is because a teacher went over their cap," Jackson said.

When this happens, students may find themselves sitting on the floor of a classroom. If someone reports this to Jackson, she said she calls the fire marshal.

John Uhlarik, psychology professor, said he removes chairs from the back of Bluemont 101 to guarantee accordance of the fire marshal's ruling. He said if he sees someone sitting on the floor he will ask the person to find a seat.

However, without his knowledge, students may walk in late and crouch at the back of the room instead of finding a seat. He said he has never seen every seat full.

In the future, Jackson said more classes may have to be scheduled earlier in the morning and later in the night.

A majority of classes are between 8 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Saturday classes also may be a possibility to accommodate the increase in students and decrease in classrooms, Jackson said.

Up 'til Dawn's St. Jude Week to raise money for children

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Monday will begin the first St. Jude Awareness Week, sponsored by Up 'til Dawn.

Students will have a chance to learn about St. Jude Children's Research Hospital and help make a difference in the life of a child.

Last year, K-State was the No. 1 money-raising school in the country for St. Jude's, Kathryn Van Keuren, executive director of Up 'til Dawn, said.

Here's a look at the the week's events:

Monday
"Casual Day"
11 a.m.-2 p.m.

Up 'til Dawn will have a table in the Union Courtyard selling orange awareness ribbons for $1.

The group also will have 2,000 paper cranes on display and sale for $1, with all proceeds going to St. Jude's in Memphis, Tenn.

Throughout the week, Up 'til Dawn will sponsor a letter-writing campaign, urging students to stop by the table and sign a form letter to be sent to their families asking for support for St. Jude's.

"If people could stop by and write one letter, that would be incredible," said Peter Carter, vice executive director for Up 'til Dawn.

Each student who writes a letter will be eligible for a grand prize drawing at the end of the week to win a DVD player.

Tuesday
"Magic Happens"
11 a.m.-2 p.m.

From noon to 1 p.m., Up 'til Dawn will have a magic show in the Union Courtyard. Students will also have the chance to donate money to the hospital.

"If we can walk away with one person knowing about St. Jude's, then we've done our job," Van Keuren said.

Wednesday
"Spirit Day"
11 a.m.-2 p.m.

Up 'til Dawn will have a foam elephant on display. The elephant will be cut into pieces, like a puzzle, and each piece can be purchased for $1. The student who buys a piece can sign his or her name on the elephant, which will be sent to St. Jude's as a way of giving moral support to those who are sick.

At 5:30 p.m., Up 'til Dawn will visit each sorority house during chapter meetings to solicit support. The committee will be singing the St. Jude's version of the K-State Fight Song.

Thursday
"Day of Love"
11 a.m.-2 p.m.

Valentine's Day sugar cookies will be available to decorate with frosting and sprinkles.

The cookies are free to anyone who would like to stop and learn more about St. Jude's.

Up 'til Dawn volunteers also will be walking around dressed in hospital scrubs handing out information about St. Jude's.

Friday
"Day of Fun"
11 a.m.-2 p.m.

The normal Up 'til Dawn table display will be in the Union Courtyard.

From 11 a.m.-1 p.m. the committee will have balloon animals available by the display table.

From 11 a.m.-11 p.m., the Pita Pit in Aggieville will be donating a portion of its sales to St. Jude's from anyone who buys a pita. The restaurant will give $1 to St. Jude's from every pita sold.

Also, KMKF-FM 101.5 will be broadcasting live from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. from the Pita Pit to help support St. Jude's.

Up 'til Dawn also will show a five-minute informational video to audiences before the feature film at Forum Hall all weekend.

Judge rules Clarett eligible for NFL draft

Court says league's ban on teenage players violates antitrust law

By Larry Neumeister
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A federal judge opened the door for Ohio State sensation Maurice Clarett and teenage football stars to turn pro, declaring Thursday that an NFL rule barring their eligibility violates antitrust law and "must be sacked."

Clarett

U.S. District Judge Shira Scheindlin said legal issues are so clearly in Clarett's favor a trial is unnecessary. The NFL said it will appeal, and it probably will try to block the ruling before the April draft.

Clarett sued the league last year to challenge its 1990 rule that a player must be out of high school three years to enter the draft.

Clarett's lawyer, Alan Milstein, called it a "total victory." He said the star running back was "thrilled" and would speak at a news conference in New York later Thursday.

The ruling, if it holds up on appeal, means that high school football players and college underclassmen will be able to make the jump to the pros just like their counterparts in the NBA.

Dozens of basketball players, including Kobe Bryant and LeBron James, have gone to the NBA straight after high school in recent years, becoming instant celebrities and signing shoe endorsement deals that make them millionaires before the ink is dry on their high school diplomas.

Scheindlin wrote that the NFL rule "is precisely the sort of conduct that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent."

"One can scarcely think of a more blatantly anticompetitive policy than one that excludes certain competitors from the market altogether," she wrote.

Clarett, a 20-year-old sophomore, played just one season at Ohio State, leading the Buckeyes to the 2002 national championship. He was barred from playing in the 2003 season for accepting improper benefits from a family friend and then lying to investigators about it.

Ohio State would have to petition the NCAA to allow Clarett to return for the 2004 season, and it is unclear whether the school would succeed. The court ruling came a day after Ohio State said it was investigating an ESPN.com report that the family friend was gambling while in daily contact with Clarett during the 2002 season.

His lawyers had called the rule arbitrary and anticompetitive, arguing it robbed players like Clarett of an opportunity to enter the multimillion-dollar marketplace.

Scheindlin noted courts already had eliminated similar age-based rules violating antitrust laws in professional basketball and hockey. She said the NFL had kept one in effect since Illinois' star running back, Harold "Red" Grange, left school in 1925 to join the Chicago Bears for $50,000.

"Either he'll succeed, or he'll be a total bust. If he can make it that rookie year without being assassinated, I think he'll be all right."

LaVar Arrington
WASHINGTON REDSKIN LINEBACKER

The league argued that Clarett should not be eligible for the draft because its rule resulted from a collective bargaining agreement with the players and is immune from antitrust scrutiny.

"We believe today's ruling is inconsistent in numerous respects with well-established labor and antitrust law," the league said.

No other player has challenged the eligibility rule. It was supported by the league's coaches and executives, who say younger players aren't physically ready for the NFL, although the 6-foot, 230-pound Clarett could be an exception.

Some observers doubted the ruling would lead many youngsters to try to turn pro.

"Most of these guys aren't ready, and the teams know that," said Robert A. McCormick, a professor at the Detroit College of Law at Michigan State University who worked on the Clarett case.

Jeff Reynolds, a writer at Pro Football Weekly, said the ruling probably would not have an immediate effect on young players around the country, but he suggested that could change if NFL teams started sending scouts to high school games.

It was more likely, he said, that players will leave college early to enter the draft.

Washington Redskins linebacker LaVar Arrington said Clarett could be in for a rough time when he joins the league.

"Because of the way he's done all these things, some people here see it as disrespectful," Arrington said at the Pro Bowl in Hawaii. "I'm sure guys are going to break his tail, try to break him in.

"Either he'll succeed, or he'll be a total bust. If he can make it that rookie year without being assassinated, I think he'll be all right."

During his state of the NFL address two days before the Super Bowl, commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the league wouldn't try to reach a settlement with Clarett.

"It's a pretty direct point in terms of what the rule is, and Maurice Clarett's status falls under the rule," Tagliabue said. "Our system is working. It is easy to identify players who were helped by staying in school and were developing their skills."

Scheindlin wasn't swayed by the league's arguments.

"While, ordinarily, the best offense is a good defense," she said, "none of these defenses hold the line."

TO THE POINT

NFL eligibility ruling sends wrong message

With the recent court ruling allowing Ohio State running back Maurice Clarett to enter the NFL draft, the door has been opened for teenagers to try their hand at a man's sport.

Before the Clarett case, the NFL was the last professional sport to ban anyone that had not been out of high school for at least three years to enter a draft.

The ruling sends the wrong message to young athletes.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Not only will the college ranks lose more gifted athletes to the glitz and glamour of the pros, but the athlete also loses out.

This ruling plants the seeds in young people's minds that education is not important if you have athletic ability.

Although the professional salaries will pay the bills for awhile, without an education to fall back on and the possibility of career-ending injuries, these young athletes are setting themselves up for failure.

An 18-year-old often is not equipped to handle millions of dollars and live life in the spotlight, with every move being watched and scrutinized.

Growing up is hard enough, let alone doing it in front of the entire sports world.

By having the three-year rule in place, it allows high school athletes who have professional aspirations the chance to gain the tools they will need to be successful.

Impaired mobility

Pedestrians not invincible, should use common sense when crossing streets

People are not dogs – I feel guilty after running over dogs.

JAMES HURLA

See, my mom never told me to look both ways before crossing the street.

I learned the lesson from common sense and large trucks barreling down the road at near-warp speed.

I've noticed common sense has very little presence on campus roads. If common sense was a person, he would lie in the fetal position in a corner, forever sobbing that he is so ignored.

The attitude that "the pedestrian has the right of way" is valid, but enormously stupid. Mr. Sense vehemently cries that it is our responsibility to dodge the multi-ton vehicles, but pride somehow overrules him.

When I drive on campus, I find myself being cautious – I don't want a lawsuit.

You people – referring here to anyone who enters a roadway assuming traffic will stop – are the ones who disprove Darwin's theory of natural selection.

If that were true, your family would've been wiped out generations ago by stampeding platypi.

Instead, you walk about strengthening the argument for a loving creator and otherwise pissing me off.

That may be, but you won't feel invincible when you're being plucked from the grill of an oversized pick-up or, more embarrassingly, my Subaru station wagon.

I'll admit, I don't always use the designated crosswalks. But more importantly, I understand the laws of physics allow me to avoid stepping in front of a vehicle. Conversely, the same laws do not allow a moving vehicle to do an Inspector-Gadget-like extension to avoid hurting your vulnerable body.

Although that would be pretty darn cool.

As long as you are being safe and respecting the laws of physics, your chances of dying a horrible, bloody death are reduced dramatically.

Perhaps you do it in search of a cheap thrill. Lying on train tracks results in soiled britches and playing Super Mario Bros. doesn't make you man enough. Daring traffic is a happy medium.

Maybe you like the feeling of power. The fact that the world comes to a stop when you enter the roadway makes you feel like you can do anything.

It will be a good test as to how powerful you really are when you come face-to-face with a windshield.

Crosswalks should be a safe haven for pedestrians.

Fact is, they are not always safe.

My point is this: I only wash my car once every few months, and having your carcass splattered across it will really dampen my spirits.

Please be sure to look both ways and make sure traffic is stopped before you enter the crosswalk.

It's merely common sense.

Otherwise, my mom can hold your hand when you cross the street.

U.S. has double standard with nuclear weapons treaty

The double standards of the U.S. policy toward nuclear nonproliferation are making a clear division between pro-U.S. and anti-U.S. nations. This is the major cause of growing fear and distrust in the world.

ALTAF KARIM

According to the Global Security Institute, the United States owns 11,000 nuclear weapons. More than 2,000 of them are ready to be launched within 15 minutes of the order from the president.

It's mind-boggling that the American people have given the "License to Kill" to someone whose credibility has become suspicious.

The Bush administration released the U.S. Nuclear Posture Review in December 2001. It says there is a need to develop a new generation of nuclear weapons.

There are also clear references to using the nuclear weapons against countries that do not have nuclear capabilities. Details of the U.S. Nuclear Posture Review can be read from www.globalsecurity.org.

Ambitions of the U.S. nuclear program are not restricted only to itself. The United States has been supporting Israel's nuclear program to cultivate an ally in the Middle East.

The United States signed an agreement with Israel that commits the United States to maintain Israel's strategic deterrence.

This includes the memorandum signed under the Clinton administration giving Israeli scientists privileged access to United States nuclear weapon laboratories. It's a clear act of nuclear proliferation.

Now Israel owns about 200 atomic bombs in the most fragile region of the world.

In this perspective, the United States is a nuclear-armed empire intent on establishing its authority on a global scale.

The philosophy of this empire under the Bush administration is based on injecting a pseudo-fear among its own people – fear of a self-created notion of an existing "evil." So this fear almost justifies any U.S. action against other nations.

The United States also is worsening the nuclear arms race between India and Pakistan.

Pakistan and India have a long history of mutual distrust. India's forcible occupation of the Kashmir in 1947 is the main cause of the dispute. The United Nations does not consider the Indian claim as legally valid and recognizes Kashmir as a disputed territory.

The Kashmir dispute initiated the nuclear arms race between India and Pakistan. India and Pakistan have fought three wars on this dispute during the past 50 years. Instead of offering help and working toward a peaceful solution, the United States has been selling weapons and F-16 fighter jets to both countries.

Although Pakistan assisted U.S. troops in working against the Taliban regime, the U.S. government has remained suspicious about Pakistan's nuclear program.

According to recent news, the U.S. government accused Pakistani nuclear scientists of aiding the nuclear programs of Iran, Libya and North Korea. Under the enormous pressure of the U.S. government, Pakistan has detained top nuclear scientists for the investigation.

A. Q. Khan, founder of the Pakistani nuclear program, acclaimed as a national hero for more than 20 years, has gone through debriefing sessions by Pakistani intelligence during the past few days. Finally, Khan admitted he and his fellows provided help to Iran, Libya and North Korea for their nuclear programs.

So the United States has put Pakistan into a dangerous and critical geopolitical situation by raising this issue.

Now President Musharraf has to play the most crucial role of his career to handle the situation.

There are two possibilities for the United States to rectify the situation.

First, if I am optimistic, the United States will move toward a peaceful resolution of disputes between India and Pakistan by disarming both countries. Eventually, the United States will ask Israel to give up nuclear weapons and make solid efforts for the restoration of peace in the Middle East.

I don't know if the United States can ask India to disarm because of economic interests in India.

Secondly, the Bush administration could ask only Pakistan to give up its nuclear program.

On one hand, this can help Bush to win the next election by projecting him as a hero who took nuclear weapons from the Islamic world.

On the other hand, it can put Pakistan into a more dangerous situation because of the resulting power imbalance in South Asia.

Being in a stronger position, the United States is free to choose from the above-mentioned possibilities. At the same time, I am afraid that, being in a weaker position, Pakistan can be forced to accept anything.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

Mad props to all the maintenance guys clearing snow off the sidewalks. It's cold out there. You guys rock.

Dude, where's my weapons of mass destruction?

For those of you out there who want to take men's studies, K-State offers it under the course title of history.

President Bush admitted that his pre-war intelligence wasn't what it should have been. Of course, we knew that when the Supreme Court elected him.

OK, so I just sat here and about watched some girl almost get hit on a crosswalk by a car because it's so snowy outside, and she had no idea she about got hit.

I would like to make a formal complaint about whoever did not cancel classes in the freaking blizzard outside. Thanks a lot, buddy.

I'm glad the sidewalks are clean of snow, and we have school.

Louie was having cheer sex with me at the basketball game.

I'm sure glad we have Dr. Wefald deciding whether to close the campus or not because he has to walk a hundred yards to his office.

I was going to criticize the Collegian for printing dumb Fourum comments, but then I realized all the dumb ones were mine.

Dear Fourum readers, the deficit cannot be budgeted.

And oh, what a great high school teacher Paul Restivo is going to be.

Thanks, K-State. I just got stuck on my way to class. That's a pretty typical way for you to look out for your students.

Note to God – Manhattan, Kansas, already got enough snow. Try to spread it around a little bit.

OK, so I got a ticket today for my parking permit not being visible. There was snow on my car!

Lafene informs students about dangers of meningitis

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lafene Health Center is distributing fact sheets to residence halls, fraternities and sororities about meningitis in response to a request by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

Sebelius' proposal was for the Kansas Board of Regents to raise awareness about the immunization for meningitis and possibly include a disclosure for the immunization in student housing contracts.

Kip Peterson, director of government affairs and communication for the board, said Regents President Reggie Robinson has contacted the president or chancellor of each of the 36 higher-education institutions in the state. He asked for information about what they are doing to educate students and parents about meningitis.

Jay Reppert, Lafene medical director, said Lafene sends a letter to all incoming students every year, and one paragraph is devoted to meningitis, the risk of meningitis and the availability of the vaccine.

"We have tried to make everyone aware," he said. "We also talk to the resident advisers at the beginning of the year and explain to them, so they can answer questions."

People who have been infected by the influenza virus are more susceptible to getting meningitis. The flu virus may damage the mucus membranes that line the throat, allowing the meningitis bacteria, which has been there for weeks, to enter the blood stream.

"If it's caught early, the outcome is far more likely to be good," Reppert said. "The earlier it presents itself, the harder it is to diagnose, and later it's much easier to diagnose, but that's not when you want to diagnose it."

When the presence of meningitis is confirmed, the person with the case, as well as close contacts who might have picked up the disease, are given antibiotics.

Reppert said if someone comes to Lafene with symptoms that look like meningitis, they are transferred to Mercy Regional Medical Center to undergo a spinal tap.

Derek Jackson, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said it has been 10 years since there was a case of meningitis in the residence halls.

"She's trying to draw attention to the fact that college students have a slightly increased chance to get meningitis," Jackson said of the governor's letter.

Reppert said although meningitis can be fatal, it is very rare.

"If you look at the statistics, we are going to lose probably five students each year to accidents," he said. "It's not one of the leading causes of student deaths."

Did you know?

Meningitis

- Meningitis is an infection of the lining around the brain. With bacteria meningitis, the bacteria gets in there and white blood cells fight the bacteria, creating damaging chemical byproducts as well as inflammation, swelling and damage to brain and surrounding tissues.
- Viral meningitis generally is milder, and patients usually have total recovery.
- Bacterial meningitis is more serious, and without treatment often results in death. With treatment, the death rate of bacterial meningitis is about 10 to 20 percent for the most common types.
- Typical symptoms are fevers, headaches, nausea, skin rash, muscle aches and sore neck.

Fair showcases local organizations

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Community Fair on Saturday at Manhattan Town Center will have more than 30 organizations in attendance, making it one of Manhattan's largest Community Fairs ever.

Audrea Martens, marketing director for Manhattan Town Center, said this is the largest fair she has ever seen.

"We have completely maxed out on all of our booth space that is available," she said.

The K-State Rowing Association will have an informational booth at the fair for people interested in joining community organizations.

Tristan Pyle, president of the men's rowing crew and senior in mechanical engineering, said the group will be advertising the club to the community.

"We will have some information and fliers available, and we will be doing some recruiting," he said.

Pyle said they also will have some rowing machines set up for people to try.

"It's an attention-getter and a good way we can interact with people," he said.

Lara Staker, public education coordinator for the Kansas Kennel Club, said they will be showcasing show and therapy dogs.

"We will have at least four dogs and possibly up to 10," she said. "We will also be showing some unusual breeds."

Staker said the Manhattan Kennel Club also will be educating people on which obedience class is best for their dogs, which breed is best for certain people and how to properly care for a dog.

Jeremy LaFaver, office manager for the American Red Cross, said they will be showcasing the triathlon in June.

"There will be a mountain bike and street bike display, a runner's display and a swimming display with a baby pool," he said.

"Our booth size is going to be a little bit larger, and our location is fairly key this year," LaFaver said. "We are hoping to utilize the extent of that space."

Salons to cut hair for charity today

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The staff of Crimpers and Crimpers Too hair salons will have a Cut-A-Thon to benefit the Women's Crisis Center from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today in the Union Courtyard, Jessica Carr, manager of Crimpers, said.

Men's haircuts will be $10 and women's haircuts will cost $15, Carr said.

"We like to do things for charities both within our community and outside," she said.

The last Cut-A-Thon was to benefit the Sept. 11, 2001, charities.

"This is not exactly an annual thing," she said. "But we have done Cut-A-Thons in the past."

Carr said Crimpers also makes other donations to various charities throughout the year.

"All of the money taken in will be donated to the women's center," she said.

Shannon Horting, stylist, said she and her other employees would work the whole time without pay.

"We don't get any pay for that day," she said. "The crisis center gets everything."

Horting said she wasn't sure whether they would get breaks during the day, but that it's worth it because the money will benefit a good cause.

"It's a good thing to help people out," she said.

"It's a good thing for the community."

Fans getting impatient with stale men's team

LOUIE NOVAK

I like Coach Jim Wooldridge.

From the moment I met him at Media Day last semester, he has always been very personable, open and honest with me.

I remember looking at his recruits for this season and saw the enthusiasm and optimism that he and his team had.

Hoop Scoop Magazine even ranked the newcomers No. 1 and said, "K-State's top eight players are good enough to play for almost anybody in the country. As a result, we should be talking about one of the most improved teams in college basketball at this time a year from now."

I, like many others, had high hopes for the 2003-04 Wildcat team.

However, K-State has struggled this year and has a 10-8 record.

Now, I believe Wooldridge and his team are treading water, and time is running out for them to salvage what is quickly becoming another disappointing season.

Fans are beginning to voice their displeasure for Wooldridge, and the Campus Fourum, along with area talk radio, have been flooded with "fire Jim Wooldridge" comments.

I don't agree with that conclusion but feel it is time to see some results.

K-State snapped a three-game losing skid Wednesday night by defeating Nebraska at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats are 2-5 in conference play and are ninth in the Big 12.

I refuse to do backflips over wins against the horrid Huskers and Texas A&M Aggies.

We should expect to win those games – especially at home.

Some would say there have been signs of improvement this season.

Six of the eight Wildcats losses have come by 10 points or less.

I'm not sure if that is something of which to be proud. It doesn't matter if you lose by five or 25 points, a loss is a loss.

To me, you can always tell a team is bad when people are satisfied that they didn't get blown out.

It just seems Wooldridge can't get the Wildcats over the hump.

When I watch the Cats play a close game, their opponent appears to know they are going to win.

They have the confidence that K-State lacks.

It is easy to blame the team's struggles this season on the tough schedule, injuries and the facts that the team lost four lettermen and that of the 16 players listed on the roster, eight are new to the program.

I hate excuses.

In the end you either win, or you lose.

March is just around the corner, and now is the time for K-State to make a move and give fans something to cheer about.

The Wildcats travel to Boulder, Colo., Saturday to face a dangerous Buffalo team.

The Wildcats have lost all six conference road games this year and 14 straight dating back to 2002.

Opponents have outscored the Cats by an average of 12 points when the team plays away from Bramlage.

I honestly want him to turn this thing around. You always want to see good things happen to good people.

The bad thing is, it's not going to get any easier.

Wooldridge and his team can no longer hover around mediocrity.

It's time for them to to sink or swim, because fans are starting to lose patience.

KSU roller hockey club begins season

Cats face St. Louis, Western Illinois to gain eligibility for post-season play

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Roller Hockey Club travels to St. Louis this weekend for games against St. Louis University and Western Illinois.

The club hopes to start the spring portion of its season on a strong note after a 4-9 finish last fall.

It will not be easy.

Coach Jerry Remsbecker said the club will play the No. 2 and 3 clubs in the Great Plains Collegiate Inline Hockey League.

On Saturday, the Wildcats face St. Louis, the second-ranked club in the league. Remsbecker said St. Louis would be the toughest challenge of the weekend.

"They have 13 good skaters who can play every position," he said.

"They have a great system and a great coach. They're extremely well organized. We'll battle them hard, well and clean."

K-State will try to avenge its 12-2 loss to the Billikens last fall.

Remsbecker said keeping everyone fresh could be a challenge against the deep St. Louis squad.

For more information
Coach Jerry Remsbecker said the club always is searching for players. Anyone interested can contact him at 532-5971.

"We have eight strong skaters. The others do their job," he said. "We'll have to juggle the lines a lot."

Captain Mike Wolff, a senior forward, knows it will take K-State's best effort to knock off St. Louis.

"We can play them well with our A- game, but it could get ugly if we don't have it," he said.

In Sunday's matchup, K-State will face Western Illinois. The Cats also have a score to settle with the Leathernecks, who prevailed 11-1 in a game last October.

Remsbecker said it is hard to know which Western Illinois club will show up because their star player, Thomas Kotek, dictates so much of how the club plays.

"Western Illinois is more of a 'Jekyll-and-Hyde' team," he said. "They have one superstar who really sets the tone."

Wolff said the club would have to key on Western Illinois' star and take advantage of any weakness.

"They have the best player in the league when he wants to be," he said.

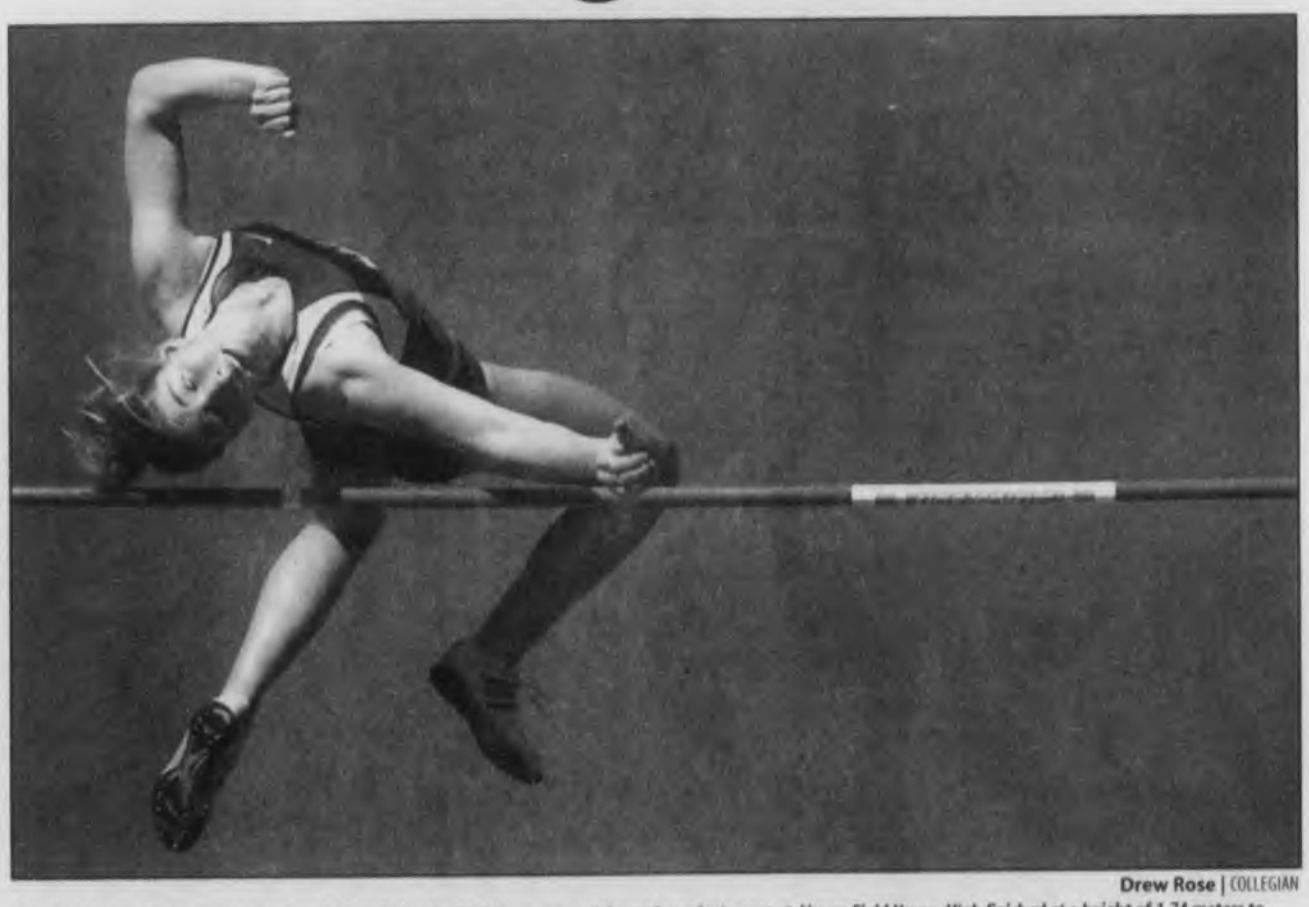
"He scored 78 points last year, but sometimes he plays lazy."

Wolff said this weekend's games are critical for the club to be eligible for post-season play because only the top eight clubs in the league advance to Regionals.

"We're sitting ninth, so we need to win every game we can to scoop up that eight seed," Wolff said.

He said the games are also important for the club to bounce back from an exhibition loss last weekend.

After the long layoff between semesters, the Cats need to get back in the game mentally and physically.



"We need to play with heads up," Wolff said.

"We've had a month and a half with no facilities (to practice in), so we have to get our head back in the game."

Remsbecker echoed that sentiment.

"We've got talented players. When they play as a team, they can be in every game."

It is again time for the track and field team to lace up its spikes.

On Saturday, the men and women will travel a few hours north to the corn fields of Lincoln, Neb., to compete in the Frank Sevigne Husker Invitational.

The meet will include some of the nation's most illustrious teams.

Track programs from the Big 12, Pac 10, Southeastern Conference, Big 10 and Western Athletic Conferences will be on hand to show their worth.

For the track team, the meet comes a month before the indoor nationals and is an opportunity to compete against some of the best athletes in the nation.

Many runners, jumpers and throwers still are looking to qualify for the indoor nationals.

K-State has a handful of possible contenders including sophomore high jumper Kyle Lancaster and junior triple jumper Chaytan Hill.

Recently, Lancaster cleared 7-foot-4.5 inches in the Northern Iowa Invitational, winning the event.

"I've been jumping well, but I'm not satisfied. I want to improve, and I've been doing it by lifting weights and working on the technical approach of jumping," Lancaster said.

Lancaster's high jump mark was both the highest in the Big 12 and the entire nation this season.

Lancaster said he was excited about his standing as the top jumper but plans to improve.

"I want to at least maintain how well I've done in past meets, but of course I want to win it," Lancaster said.

Lancaster will compete in the Olympic Trails in Sacramento, Calif., this spring.

Hill is another Wildcat having a strong season.

The men's track and field team is ranked No. 19 in the latest Track-Wire poll.

The poll takes into consideration many aspects of a team, including injuries and how well they have placed at meets.

It is a good representation and shows some of the success the team is having.

The team will try to bring the same competitive edge to the table against the cast of teams traveling to Nebraska.

Most of K-State's top performers will be on hand to help bring much success from the meet.

"I hope to peak during the big meets and take the title," Lancaster said.

Lancaster said that the team has been improving and is gunning for a conference title.

"We are really improving and I think the team has a chance to win the Big 12 conference title coming up soon," Lancaster said.

CFB | Bielema leaves K-State for Wisconsin coordinator job

Co-defensive coordinator Bret Bielema accepted the job as defensive coordinator at the University of Wisconsin, according to Wisconsin Sports Information.

Bielema

Bielema had served as the Wildcats' co-defensive coordinator, linebackers coach and recruiting coordinator for the past two years.

Wisconsin coach Barry Alvarez announced Bielema's new position Thursday.

K-State's defense was ranked sixth nationally in total defense in 2003

CFB | NFL declares Larry Fitzgerald eligible

Heisman Trophy runner-up Larry Fitzgerald, the Pittsburgh sophomore who set NCAA receiving records in his two college seasons, was declared eligible Thursday for the NFL draft.

Fitzgerald

The NFL's ruling came on the same day a federal judge opened the door for running back Maurice Clarett also to turn pro despite playing only one season at Ohio State.

Under league rules, a player must be in college for three NFL seasons before he can be drafted.

Fitzgerald left the Academy of Holy Angels in Minneapolis, Minn., midway through his senior year in 2001 and transferred to Valley Forge (Pa.) Military Academy to boost his grades for college.

The NFL determined Fitzgerald was eligible because he would have graduated from high school in 2001 had he not transferred and thus is three years past his senior year of high school.

TV | ESPN cancels sports drama 'Playmakers'

ESPN was proud of "Playmakers," which showed the network could produce a viable sports drama.

But the show, which focused on a fictional team and featured plots that included drug use, marital infidelity, racism and homophobia, angered the NFL. In the end, the network decided it was better to cancel the show Wednesday after one season than antagonize a longtime, and lucrative, partner.

ESPN is paying the NFL $4.8 billion over eight seasons for the rights to Sunday night games.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue had expressed concerns that "Playmakers" was one-dimensional and perpetuated racial stereotypes.

Golf | Els shoots career-best at Heineken Classic

Flirting with a 59 for the first time in his career, the pressure got to Ernie Els.

Els

Els admitted that nerves got the best of him Thursday, and he settled for a career-best 12-under-par 60 in the opening round of the Heineken Classic, finishing a stroke short of becoming the first player to shoot a sub-60 round in the history of the European and Australasian tours.

The South African star, seeking his third straight victory on Royal Melbourne's composite course, shot par the final two holes and had a bogey on No. 15.

He finished the round in windless conditions with an eagle, 11 birdies, five pars and the lone bogey.

'Giselle' ballet to deliver dramatic love story at McCain Auditorium at 8 tonight

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the most famous ballets of all time will appear tonight at McCain Auditorium. "Giselle," a classic story of tragic romance, will be performed by the Moscow Festival Ballet at 8 p.m.

Thom Jackson, McCain marketing and development officer, describes the story of "Giselle" as a Romeo-and-Juliet story.

"It's a beautiful story about remorse, love, compassion, forgiveness," Jackson said.

Joyce Yagerline, director of the dance program, said the ballet will appeal to people because of its romantic element.

"I think everyone loves a love story," Yagerline said. "It's a love story, but it also has some drama in it."

In the ballet, Giselle is a peasant girl who falls in love with Count Albrecht. When Giselle learns Albrecht is betrothed to another woman, she is devastated and kills herself. Giselle is buried in a cemetery with other women who have suffered similar fates.

At night, the spirits of the women rise to seek revenge on the men who jilted them. When their lovers visit their graves, the women put them under a spell and make them dance themselves to death.

Giselle plans to do the same to Albrecht, but changes her mind when she sees he is truly remorseful about her death. Instead of dancing him to death, Giselle protects Albrecht from the spirits until dawn, when she is able to set him free.

"Her love for him transcends that curse," Yagerline said. "She loves him so much that she saves him from being condemned to death."

Besides its beautiful story, "Giselle" also features choreography as intricate and detailed as it is athletic.

"In order to be a premier dancer in a ballet like this, you've got to be an amazing athlete," Jackson said.

"These people run, jump and dance for hours a day." Yagerline said the second act is challenging for the dancers because they must keep strong legs, while making the upper half appear to be light and floating.

Other elements add to the stunning visuals of the ballet.

"The lighting on the show will be spectacular," Jackson said, "the costumes and sets phenomenal. It's a visual feast of the eyes."

'Monster' leading lady's portrayal of female serial killer deserves accolades

"Monster"
★★★★☆
Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

The Academy Award for Best Actress belongs to Charlize Theron.

The blonde beauty is nearly unrecognizable in her most harrowing film role, having put on 40 pounds and gone through long makeup sessions to emerge as serial killer Aileen Wuornos for the movie "Monster."

First-time writer/director Patty Jenkins spins the tale of the highway prostitute who was convicted of murdering six men between 1989 and 1990. Wuornos was executed in October 2002.

Theron plays Wuornos as she lived: tragic, confused, aggressive but ultimately just wanting to be loved. Theron finds that love in Selby (Christina Ricci), a young woman with her own battles and confusion. She, in turn, finds a mentor of sorts in Wuornos.

And that's the interesting part of their relationship. Both women are tragically incapable of giving the other what she wants.

Wuornos never can have the stable relationship she desires because of her inability to disassociate herself from her haunting childhood of abuse.

Selby's naivete and inexperience in worldly matters places Wuornos in a dual role, both as a love interest and as the mother figure Selby likely wishes she possessed.

Theron, amazingly enough, has mastered disappearing herself and simply becoming her character.

Ricci's performance, meanwhile, seems forced and wooden.

Her years of playing misanthropic characters probably has desensitized her to the plight of Selby.

Theron brings a fresh perspective to the table in her portrayal of a killer whom we can't decide if we hate or merely pity. Her career of largely forgettable performances might be over.

Another fascinating facet of Wuornos' life and Theron's portrayal of her is that Wuornos is almost an asexual being.

She loathes men and doesn't seem to enjoy Selby's company as a romantic interest as much as she does because she simply needs a friend.

Selby is in love with the idea of having someone close who understands her, while Wuornos craves stability and a sympathetic ear, which Theron states several times in the film.

Both characters have an unfulfilled need, and it isn't love.

Jenkins doesn't try to preach to her audience. Theron's character seems to be conflicted about her killings: at one point, you feel genuinely sorry for her because she shows remorse, but in the next, she's back to killing men unapologetically, unremorseful about her crime.

Obviously, she is trying, in some indirect way, to get revenge on the men who abused her in her past.

She goes so far in her crimes, however, that the difference between scumbags and truly harmless men becomes blurred, and all men become manifestations of her past attacker.

In that way, you pity Wuornos' lack of clarity.

The movie, already a Golden Globe winner, now must try to cross the hurdles of the Oscar race, later this month.

I am confident that Theron's portrayal of one of the nation's most cold-blooded killers will garner her accolades years after "Monster" makes the transition to home video.

Winter weddings offer elegant photos

By Lara Hastings
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the recent snowfall and the chill in the air, it would be hard to imagine a wedding in this kind of weather.

The spring, summer and fall months are packed with ceremonies, but when winter hits, couples tend to wait until after the thaw to have their big day.

Although winter weddings are not the most popular, sometimes it is the best option for students during their long winter break in December and January.

The unpredictable winter weather makes outdoor wedding photographs risky, but most photographers are flexible and willing to work with their clients.

Clayton Jenkins of Jenkins Serene Photography Inc. in Salina, Kan., said the studio has only about two winter weddings a year, but it treats all weddings the same. The studio works with the personalities of its clients.

"We play it by ear," Jenkins said. "We plan out what kind of shots we're going to take ahead of time and have a backup plan."

Sometimes the photographer and clients are lucky. When the weather decides to cooperate, outdoor winter pictures can turn out just as beautiful as those taken in the spring.

Now the only problem to dodge is the dreary background. Brown grass and dead plants are not appealing backdrop to a wedding photo.

Mark Rose of Mark Rose Photography in Manhattan avoids a drab winter background by focusing on the couple. He also often takes black and white photos.

"If you do black and white, you can't tell if the grass is brown or green," Rose said.

Jenkins has even taken wedding pictures in the snow. If the bride and groom are willing to brave the cold and snow, the photographers are willing as well.

"The cold air makes noses and faces turn red," Jenkins said.

He said the pictures should be taken within the first five minutes of stepping outside to avoid this.

Outdoor photography is not the only option. Indoor photos may be a more secure plan for those planning winter weddings. Jenkins recommends choosing a church or other venue with a lot of character, especially for winter weddings.

Post-ceremony, pre-reception photos most popular

Q: When should formal pictures be taken?

A: Photography session timing is up to you. Here are the options:

Before ceremony: This is our favorite, but it's out if you two don't want to see each other before the wedding. More and more couples choose to spend time alone pre-ceremony, but this can be a great chance to take family and wedding-party pictures when everyone's excited and fresh.

Consider whether you want to take this time away from guests.

Afterward: You might need to redo your makeup for a late shoot, and its feasibility depends on the party's length.

The biggest advantage of a post-wedding photo shoot? No distractions or nerves.

Q. We're on a really tight budget. Is it smart to hire a photography student or ask an amateur photographer guest to take pictures?

A. If you find a truly talented student or you've always admired your cousin's skill, consider this option.

Just keep in mind that if the photographer doesn't have wedding experience, you might not get great results.

Bride's dress selected in free wedding contest; bridesmaids' gowns voting begins at midnight

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kelly Lynn finally has the wedding dress she wanted.

After two months of voting, the Collegian's Once in a Lifetime Plans a Wedding closed the online poll for the bride-to-be's dress Thursday afternoon.

Lynn, K-State alumnus and winning bride of the competition, will be wearing a two-piece whisper chifon dress.

The winning dress received 629 votes, while the strapless satin gown came in second with 580 votes.

"I really wanted a two-piece," Lynn said. "I wanted one with a waistline, and I think they're more comfortable."

A total of 1,587 votes were cast for the bride's dress.

Interested individuals now have the opportunity to vote online for bridesmaids dresses.

Six different tops will be shown online, and the top four tops will be selected for Lynn's bridesmaids. Each bridesmaid will wear a different top with matching skirts in the wedding.

"I wanted to do separate tops so they have some separation," Lynn said. "I was excited that each of them could wear something different."

Voting for the bridesmaid dresses begins today and continues through March 1. Brief descriptions of the dresses, as well as pictures, will be online at www.kstatecollegian.com under the Once in a Lifetime Plans a Wedding section.

Lynn and her fiance, Aaron Stohs, senior in veterinary medicine, were named winners of the Once in a Lifetime contest in December.

As winners, the couple receives a free wedding, which includes a wedding gown, three bridesmaid dresses, four tuxedo rentals, guest invitations, flowers for the wedding and the bride's hairstyle.

All items will be voted on by interested individuals throughout the semester, and the winning items will appear in Lynn and Stohs' wedding this summer.

Dean talks of ending campaign

By Nedra Pickler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Howard Dean told supporters Thursday he will be out of the race for the Democratic nomination for president if he fails to win the Wisconsin primary, declaring "all that you have worked for these past months is on the line on a single day, in a single state."

Dean
DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

Asked if Dean plans to end his campaign if he loses in Wisconsin on Feb. 17, Dean spokesman Jay Carson said: "It's a moot point because we are going to win Wisconsin. ... This is an e-mail to supporters to let them know how important Wisconsin is to the campaign."

In the e-mail distributed in the early hours of Thursday, Dean wrote: "The entire race has come down to this: we must win Wisconsin. ... We will get a boost this weekend in Washington, Michigan, and Maine, but our true test will be the Wisconsin primary. A win there will carry us to the big states of March 2 and narrow the field to two candidates. Anything less will put us out of this race."

The e-mail, which included a plea for a $100 contribution, resulted in more than $125,000 in online contributions by noon EST Thursday, the campaign said.

Dean, once the front-runner with $41 million in campaign funds, has failed to win a single delegate contest since voting began with the Iowa caucuses Jan. 19.

He finished a distant third in Iowa, behind John Kerry and John Edwards, and was runner-up to Kerry in the New Hampshire primary Jan. 27. He did not win any of the seven states that had caucuses or primaries Tuesday.

Adding to his reputation as the front-runner, Kerry picked up the endorsement of Maine Gov. John Baldacci and former Senate majority leader George Mitchell of Maine.

The governor, recuperating from injuries suffered in a car accident, released a statement during Kerry's trip to Portland, Maine, saying, "Senator Kerry is ready to lead. He is ready to take our country in a better direction."

The state holds Democratic caucuses Sunday.

Dean and Kerry's other major rivals for the nomination, Edwards and Wesley Clark, were fanning across the country Thursday in search of support in upcoming contests that can keep them competitive.

Dean earlier had vowed to remain in the race through March 2, the "Super Tuesday" election day featuring 10 contests for delegates. He has targeted Wisconsin's Feb. 17 primary for an all-out effort to slow Kerry's march toward the nomination, part of a long-shot strategy of winning delegates if not first place in the elections themselves.

Dean plans to campaign in Michigan, yet the former Vermont governor has acknowledged that he probably can't win there in Saturday's caucuses.

But he hopes to pick up enough delegates to keep him in the race.

All the candidates are pointing to a showdown in Wisconsin. But the odds are with Kerry, who has the most money and allies.

"Without money, you can't have the troops. Without troops, you can't compete. How can you compete with a guy who can write himself a check for ads in California?" Michigan pollster Ed Sarpolus said.

Clark, Edwards and Dean hope to rise out of Wisconsin as the only alternative to Kerry when the race turns to contests in California, New York and eight other "Super Tuesday" states.

Two officials close to Clark, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the retired Army general considered dropping out of the race Tuesday night after scoring a single victory, a nail-biter in Oklahoma.

Court's ruling recognizing gay marriage brings lobbying groups to Massachusetts

By Jennifer Peter
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON – Grandparents and children have been transformed into lobbyists. Parishioners are getting political advice during church services. Lawmakers have been so bombarded with e-mail that some have shut down their computer servers to catch up.

Fierce lobbying for and against gay marriage is under way in Massachusetts, where the nation's first legally sanctioned same-sex weddings could take place as early as this spring because of a groundbreaking ruling from the state's highest court.

The court has given legislators little or no way to prevent it from happening come May.

Instead, the lobbying is focusing ever more closely on next week's constitutional convention, where lawmakers will consider an amendment that effectively would overturn the ruling and ban gay marriage if ratified by the voters in 2006.

House Speaker Thomas Finneran said Thursday that lawmakers are looking for a way to prevent gay marriages from occurring in Massachusetts until the 2006 vote.

Lawmakers could ask the court to move back its May deadline for them to pass a law allowing gay marriage.

The debate has put this famously liberal state at the very center of one of the day's most volatile social issues.

"If we lose the fight in Massachusetts, what will happen everywhere else?" said Patrick Guerriero, president of the Log Cabin Republicans, a national gay rights group. "What does that say to the moderate Democrat who's on the fence about the issue in Alabama?"

The issue has brought national organizations into the state to help organize vigils, direct-mail campaigns, radio spots and newspaper ads.

The lobbying campaign began almost immediately after the state Supreme Judicial Court declared last November that gay couples are entitled under the state constitution to all the rights of marriage.

Rallies, prayer sessions and pleas for equality have echoed through the Statehouse since then, with much of the debate centered on whether lawmakers should offer gay couples Vermont-style "civil unions."

But on Wednesday, the high court made it clear that gays are entitled to nothing short of marriage and that civil unions would not pass constitutional muster.

Folk singer to perform tonight as part of BirdHouse series

By Lara Hastings
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singer and songwriter Patty Larkin will begin the Manhattan Arts Center's spring 2004 BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series at 8 tonight.

Larkin will be joined by drummer and producer Ben Wittman,in her fourth performance in the BirdHouse series.

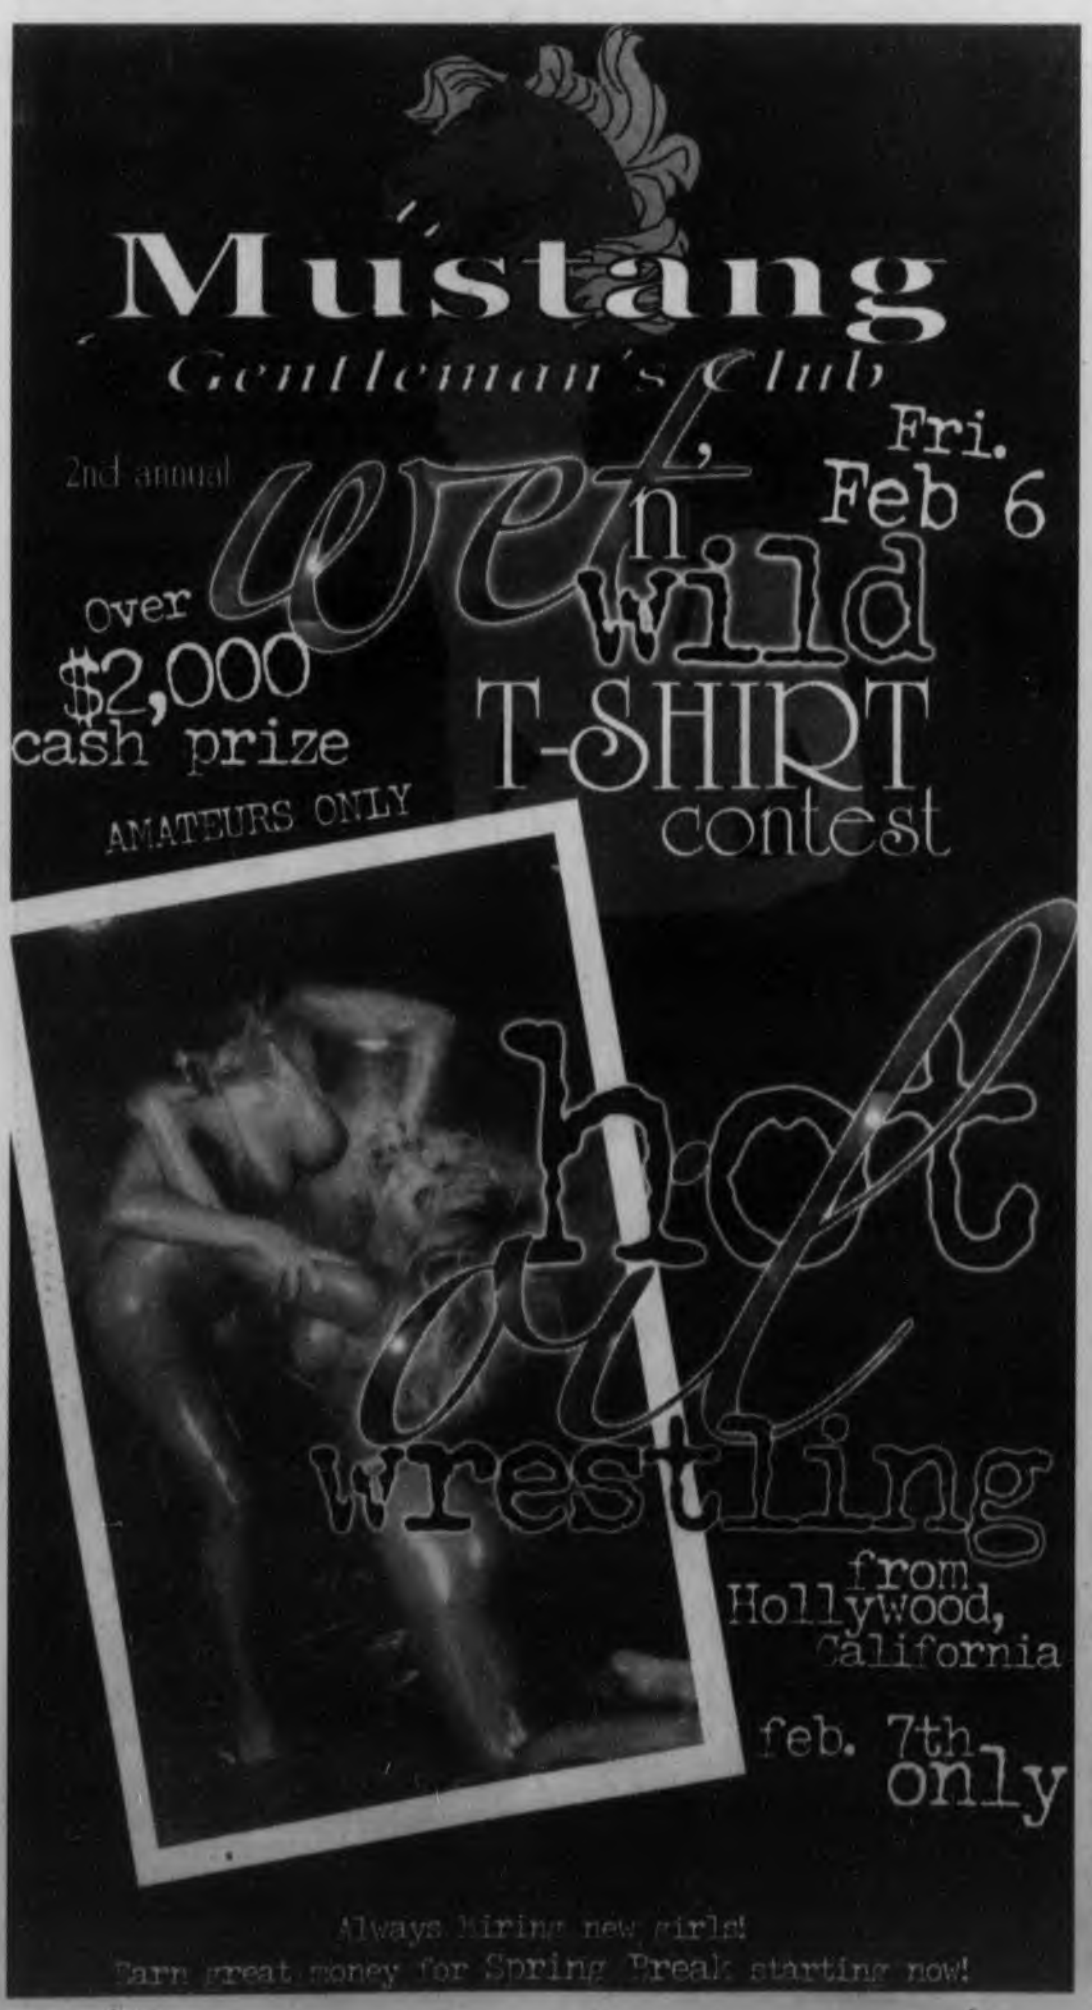
The concert will include songs from her latest album, "Red = Luck," described as a mix of loss and hope, inspired by the events of Sept. 11, 2001.

Larkin's cutting-edge folk music, mixed with grunge and industrial sounds, has been featured in five motion pictures, including "Random Hearts" with Harrison Ford and Kristin Scott Thomas, and "Sliding Doors" with Gwyneth Paltrow.

Her songs also have been covered by such artists as Holly Cole and Cher.

The performer also is among artists Sting and Paula Cole in receiving an honorary doctorate in music from the Berklee College of Music in Boston. The mayor of Boston, Thomas Menino, declared a "Patty Larkin Appreciation Day."

The Manhattan Arts Center's BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series is one of the most popular shows at the theater, said Brady Miller, program and marketing director for the arts center.



Penny Senften, executive director, said Larkin's performance will be the beginning of a successful BirdHouse season.

"We've had people coming in to find out about it before we've even released the flyers," she said. "People know they're going to get a good lineup."

— Corbin H. Crable contributed to this story.

If you go
BirdHouse series

Tickets are $15 for adults and $12 for students and seniors and can be purchased at the Manhattan Arts Center, Claflin Books and Copies, The Dusty Bookshelf or by phone at 537-4420.

TENET | CIA director says Iraq weapons could be found eventually

"We are nowhere near 85 percent finished," he said, in a direct rebuttal to statements made by his former chief adviser on Iraq's weapons, David Kay.

Since Kay resigned two weeks ago, his statements that Saddam's purported weapons didn't exist at the time of the U.S. invasion have sparked an intense debate over the prewar intelligence the Bush administration used to justify the war.

Tenet spoke hours before the Senate Intelligence Committee was to begin a closed-door review of a draft report critical of prewar intelligence. It also came a day before Bush was expected to name a commission to examine intelligence problems.

Tenet outlined the sources of the CIA's prewar estimates, saying they were based on years of U.N. weapons inspections. Once the inspectors left in the late 1990s, it was based mostly on informants – some he acknowledged as suspect – and on technical intelligence.

He acknowledged that many of the agency's weapons of mass destruction prewar estimates have not been borne out so far.

For example, U.S. analysts believed that Saddam's regime was trying to reconstitute its nuclear weapons program but have found no evidence of that, he said.

On chemical and biological weapons, Tenet said analysts believed that Saddam had ongoing programs and perhaps stockpiles and have found no evidence of such ongoing programs. He asserted, however, that the weapons-searching teams needed more time.

Two sources with high-level access to Saddam's regime told the CIA in the fall of 2002, shortly before the war, that production of biological and chemical weapons was ongoing, Tenet said.

Those sources "solidified and reinforced ... my own view of the danger posed by Saddam's regime," Tenet said, taking direct responsibility for what was passed on to Bush.

On one key point that is befuddling weapons inspectors, Tenet said he did not know at this point whether it was possible Saddam's own officials had lied to the Iraqi leader about what his regime had in the way of weapons.

The failure to find weapons of mass destruction is turning into a major political issue ahead of the presidential election, calling into question the justification for the war as U.S. casualties mount.

Republicans in Congress have increasingly been blaming poor intelligence and Tenet, who was appointed by President Clinton.

Democrats have said intelligence agencies deserved only part of the blame and have accused the White House of showcasing intelligence that bolstered the case for war while ignoring dissenting opinions.

Even as Tenet acknowledged some intelligence shortcomings in Iraq, he listed other work that he said represented great successes.

He credited U.S. intelligence on Iran and Libya's nuclear programs with recent decisions by those countries to cooperate with international arms inspectors.

Tenet credited CIA spies with the arrests of Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, purported mastermind behind the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, and Asia's leading terror suspect, Hambali.

RICIN | Investigation continues in search for origin of deadly powder

It can easily be made from castor beans.

Although no one has become ill from the ricin, nine staffers in Frist's office have been asked to submit two blood samples to Navy medical researchers, Frist spokesman Nick Smith said.

The aides were told it was to see if they had developed antibodies to the ricin, which might aid in development of an antidote.

Investigators are interviewing people who visited the buildings before the ricin's discovery, as well as employees.

They described everyone so far as cooperative.

One Senate aide who was questioned and spoke on condition of anonymity said he had not been contacted for a second round and knew of no other staffers who were being questioned again.

The intern who found the ricin, described as a college-age woman, was credited by U.S. Capitol Police Chief Terrance Gainer with taking quick, decisive action when she found the substance.

"The young intern knew enough about precautions and to be wary to sound the alarm," Gainer said.

As the investigation progressed, life began returning to normal on Capitol Hill.

The Russell Senate Office Building, the oldest and closest to the Capitol, reopened shortly after noon Thursday.

The Hart Senate Office Building opened later in the evening.

Hill workers waited in lines dozens deep in the winter chill to return to return to their desks.

"I'm anxious to get back to work because it's been so disorienting being out of my office," said Sen. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, who has been working out of a Capitol office since Monday.

The Dirksen Senate Office Building, where the ricin was found, was scheduled to reopen by Monday morning.

The ricin investigation is not limited to Capitol Hill.

Authorities are examining whether there is any link between the toxin found in Frist's office and that mailed in two letters by a self-styled "Fallen Angel" angered by new federal rules requiring greater rest periods for truck drivers.

Those letters were found Oct. 15 at a mail facility in Greenville, S.C., and Nov. 6 at an offsite location where mail is processed for the White House.

The "Fallen Angel" author, claiming to be a tanker fleet owner, threatens in both letters to "start dumping" more ricin if the new rules are not repealed.

SNOW | Class cancellation allowed for more effective snow removal

"I wonder why they didn't cancel classes in the morning when it was really bad. And now (2 p.m.) it's sort of getting better and seems sort of pointless to cancel school," Regehr said.

President Jon Wefald issued a declaration of inclement weather, the second this semester, at about 10 a.m., but it didn't go into effect until 2 p.m., said Cheryl May, director of media relations and marketing.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the weather conditions in the morning were not severe enough to close the campus.

He said the decision to give students half a day off was made after getting the latest road reports.

"We were concerned about the health and safety of our people," Rawson said.

He said slush and ice could make roads and sidewalks slick, especially in the evening when the temperature was expected to drop.

Freeing campus from students was also supposed to give personnel an opportunity to remove snowdrifts from sidewalks, streets and parking lots.

"We've had between 3 and 4 inches today and about 9 inches on Monday, so overall it's about 14-15 inches of snow to remove.

"With students around, our crew just wasn't able to keep up with snowfalls," Rawson said.

He said some weather forecasts predicted show would hit Manhattan again by the beginning of next week.

Defense witness in Peterson case dies of old age

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MODESTO, Calif. – A witness who claimed to have seen Laci Peterson hours after police allege her husband killed her has died, potentially dealing a blow to Scott Peterson's defense.

Vivian Mitchell, 78, died early Wednesday of natural causes, according to her family.

She was one of three people who said she saw Laci Peterson alive midmorning on Dec. 24, 2002. Authorities assert Scott Peterson killed his pregnant wife the night before or early that morning, then drove to San Francisco Bay and dumped her body.

Prosecutors have charged Scott Peterson, 31, with two counts of murder.

His trial may start later this month in San Mateo County, where it was moved because of extensive publicity in Modesto, where the couple lived. If convicted, Peterson could face the death penalty.

Peterson's defense already has started questioning potential jurors in San Mateo County.

Paul Strand, a political science professor at San Diego State University, confirmed Thursday he's conducting the poll but refused to elaborate, citing a gag order.

Strand also conducted one of two surveys the defense cited in its successful bid to move the trial out of Stanislaus County.

Mitchell, who lived nine blocks from the Petersons' home, was one of three people who said they saw Laci Peterson walking her dog about 10 a.m. Christmas Eve 2002.

Geragos and John Goold, a Stanislaus County prosecutor, refused to say Wednesday whether Mitchell had been questioned under oath at any point.

President Bush makes a point as he is interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press" during a pre-taping Saturday in the Oval Office of the White House. During the interview with NBC moderator Tim Russert, Bush denied he led the nation to war under false pretenses. The show aired on NBC Sunday.

Bush says Iraq could have made nuclear weapons

By Deb Riechmann

WASHINGTON, D.C. – President Bush denied he marched America into war under false pretenses and said the U.S.-led invasion was necessary because Saddam Hussein could have developed a nuclear weapon.

"I don't think America can stand by and hope for the best," the president said. Bush suggested Saddam may have destroyed or spirited out of the country the banned weapons the Bush administration cited as a main rationale for the war.

"I expected to find the weapons," Bush said in an Oval Office interview broadcast Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"Sitting behind this desk, making a very difficult decision of war and peace, I based my decision on the best intelligence possible," the president said. The interview was taped Saturday.

WASHINGTON, D.C. – They were two years apart, these two Yale boys, these sons of privilege, and so the moment of truth came first for John Kerry, later for George W. Bush. Each faced the same life-changing question as did so many others of their generation: what to do about Vietnam.

Kerry, part of the class of 1966, signed on with the Navy late in 1965, then had months to ponder his decision before actually entering officer candidate school after graduation. The war, his decision, his doubts, all hung over him as he spoke at commencement the following June.

"What was an excess of isolationism has become an excess of interventionism," he told fellow students.

He had to know his life was set on a course for Vietnam.

Increase in Rec usage forces long waits; students may need to change routines

Isaac Crabtree has had a difficult time running on the track at the Rec.

He runs in the late afternoon and early evening. the peak times at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, and as a result, the senior in civil engineering has to deal with crowds on the four-lane track.

"You have to weave in and out through the people when you are running," Crabtree said.

About 18,422 students visited during the week of Jan. 26-30 – an increase from 12,668 students that visited during the week of Nov. 10-14.

Steve Martini, associate director, said during that January week, there were about 4,000 people a day using the Rec Complex.

Connie Grunstad, assistant director, said this increase is probably due to the weather.

"During the winter months things always pick up, and with this extreme cold, nobody wants to be outside," she said. "Typically, if the weather is nice, people are outside."

The peak time with the most attendance is from about 3 to 8 p.m.

One day this semester, Grunstad said the complex had about 555 people come in between 7 and 8 p.m.

With the increase in visitors, some regulars have had to change their workout routine.

Kevin Moncke, senior in business, said he has changed the time he visits the complex because of the increase in students.

"I switched to going in the morning when it is less crowded," he said.

Grunstad said they have put notices on the machines for people to limit their workouts to 30 minutes to prevent lines.

"We encourage everybody to be aware of the people that are waiting for the machines," she said.

Other students, however, have noticed the increase but not been affected.

Greek Affairs investigating fraternity incident

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department received a 911 call early Friday morning from a man who was locked in the trunk of his fraternity brother's Pontiac Sunfire.

Michael Farrell, freshman in open-option, and Beta Theta Pi fraternity member, was released from the trunk by locksmith Ray Karsmizki, who was called by police at 5:45 a.m. Friday to unlock the trunk of the car, according to the Manhattan Mercury.

Although there are conflicting reports on whether the incident was intentional, Dave Hart, Beta Theta Pi president, said he couldn't confirm the nature of the incident.

"We're very thankful that Michael is OK, and we're dealing with this matter internally," Hart said. "We're working with Greek Affairs and our national fraternity on this matter."

Aaron Siders, Interfraternity Council president, said he was not sure of the details of the incident, but said he wasn't sure if it warranted any action on IFC's part.

However, he said if the incident did warrant specific judicial sanctions, that IFC wouldn't hesitate to implement those sanctions.

"We won't ignore it, but at this time I'm not sure of the details of the incident," he said.

Hart said Greek Affairs and the university would be working on an investigation of the incident and would release more information in the coming weeks.

529 dead
As of Friday, 529 U.S. service members have died since the beginning of military operations in Iraq, according to the Department of Defense. Since May 1, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 391 U.S. soldiers have died — 254 as a result of hostile action.

Saddam's money
The United States believes it has found at least $300 million Saddam Hussein hid in banks, yet doesn't have enough evidence to get countries such as Syria and Switzerland to hand over the money, U.S. and European officials said. The money could go to the Iraq insurgency or the country's reconstruction.

Deadly uprising
Hundreds of Haitians looted TV sets, mattresses and sacks of flour Sunday in St. Marc, one of several communities seized by armed rebels in a bloody uprising against President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. At least 18 people have been killed since armed rebels began their assault four days ago.

Seeking victory
Fresh off wins in two caucus states, John Kerry sought a third victory while questioning President Bush's National Guard service and adding another endorsement. Democratic presidential rivals Wesley Clark, Howard Dean and John Edwards pledged to stay in the race.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

CBS, MTV stuck in boobytrap

Staff and wire reports

A week after the Super Bowl, Janet Jackson and Justin Timberlake are embarrassed, Federal Communications Commission Chairman Michael Powell is threatening fines, CBS is up in arms, Viacom (CBS/MTV parent company) is slapping MTV execs on the wrist, and MTV producers are shrugging their shoulders.

The nearly X-rated display by Jackson and Timberlake has parents wondering if there are any shows left on television suitable for children. But more importantly, what exactly was Janet wearing over her nipple?

A SAD ENDING

The mechanic charged with kidnapping and killing an 11-year-old girl whose abduction was caught on a car-wash surveillance camera was ordered held without bond Saturday.

Joseph Smith waived his first court appearance in the slaying of Carlie Brucia a day after her body was pulled from thick underbrush in a church parking lot.

HOMEMAKING GURU

Those hoping for a Martha Stewart jail sentence, listen up.

The prosecution's star witness, Douglas Faneuil, testified Wednesday that Stewart ordered all her ImClone Systems stock sold after she learned the company founder was dumping his own shares.

Faneuil said he passed along the tip to Stewart on orders from her broker.

Stewart's overall savings from pulling her stock: $50,000.

KERRY'S WEEK

John Edwards and Wesley Clark showed signs of life last week in the South Carolina and Oklahoma primaries, but it was John Kerry who took the rest of the state primaries in overwhelming majorities, including Missouri.

Meanwhile, President Bush's approval rating is down to 47 percent – the same rating his father had just before he lost to Bill Clinton.

In one of the most embarrassing displays of meteorology, last week's meteorologists in the Midwest incorrectly predicted the "storm of the century" as one Kansas City meteorologist put it.

The storm – expected to produce up to 15 inches last Monday – sprinkled just a dusting to 2 inches on most of eastern Kansas and Missouri. Meteorologist Gary Lezak in Kansas City said Tuesday he had 400 hate e-mails in his inbox that morning.

OK TO BE GAY

A Massachusetts high court last week ruled that gays should be afforded the right to marry someone of the same sex, thus creating a national culture war.

The ruling, condemned by President Bush, is being questioned by state leaders.

Coming up: The state is calling a constitutional convention in the next week to put an amendment proposal on a 2006 ballot.

Corporation creates jobs

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"We have a need for all kinds of experience. No matter what your degree is, you'll come in here doing all kinds of things you never experienced"

Ron Sampson
PRESIDENT AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF MACC

Mid-American Commercialization Corporation has been creating professional-level job opportunities as well as more opportunities for internships for undergraduate and graduate students.

MACC is a non-profit organization that creates companies and "incubates" them until they are big enough to be on their own, said Ron Sampson, president and chief executive of MACC.

It was formed by K-State, Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation, the city of Manhattan and the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

"Our job is to facilitate commercialization of technology to benefit economy," he said.

Sampson said MACC has now created more than 90 jobs since its creation in 1995.

"We're not just creating jobs but high paying ones," he said.

MACC also takes on undergraduates and graduates as interns, Sampson said.

"We have three intern programs," he said. "They come from various colleges, not just business."

The first program is for undergraduates, and they take four or five at a time.

The second program is for master's degree students, and they rotate between MACC, K-State Research Foundation and the Office of Sponsored Research.

Thirdly, they also occasionally take master's degree interns for MACC only.

"We have a need for all kinds of experience," he said. "No matter what your degree is, you'll come in here doing all kinds of things you never experienced."

Sampson said it is not uncommon for interns to end up working for them.

"A lot of those people who intern end up working for us after they graduate," he said.

Lyle Butler, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said Manhattan doesn't have many professional-level jobs outside of K-State.

"We do have some, but not the number of big metropolitan areas," he said.

For some people, it can be difficult to obtain a professional-level job, he said.

"If they have a spouse who is a professional, a lot of times there is difficulty in finding the spouse a professional-level job," he said.

Butler said MACC also helps the city save money.

"Rather than going out and bringing businesses in which costs a lot of money, they are creating them here," he said.

Ron Fehr, city manager, said MACC has been excellent for the community.

"The big thing it does for Manhattan is create more professional level jobs to help retain grad students," he said.

The start-up companies that MACC includes do well, because they are new companies and aren't competing with much, he said.

Fehr said he was confident MACC would continue to grow and help the Manhattan economy.

"I think the future is very bright. Their track record has been excellent as far as growth," Fehr said.

Sampson said funding is collected from donations of various sources. Funding comes from the KTEC, the city of Manhattan, patents from the university and donated technology patents from large companies.

He said it is their goal to become self-reliant. Each year they ask for less money from the city for support. This year only $65,000 was requested, which is 6 percent less than last year.

"We're trying to reduce our dependency on government funding in order to build self-sufficiency," he said. "It's a way of measuring our growth."

Pence, McCandless become 2nd pair to announce SGA candidacy

Leah Pence, junior in agricultural communications and women's studies, and David McCandless, senior in political science, announce their candidacy to run for student body president and vice president, respectively.

Another presidential candidate pair has begun their campaign for the 2004 Student Governing Association election.

Leah Pence, junior in agricultural communications and women's studies, and David McCandless, senior in political science and public relations, have announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president.

With a slogan of "EACH student counts," Pence and McCandless said they are ready to help students help K-State.

"We want to help students leave it a better place," Pence, a leadership ambassador, said.

EACH stands for empowerment, accountability, commitment and heart, the four points of the pair's campaign.

Empowerment is one of the central issues in the pair's campaign.

Pence and McCandless said they want to give students a voice and the power to make changes at K-State. They also want students to know about all resources available to them on campus.

"We're going to take a lot of steps to ensure that students are aware of the resources available to them on campus," said McCandless, a leadership ambassador and student senator.

Accountability is the pair's focus when it comes to the continuing tuition struggle. With tuition increases in the past two years and more to come, Pence and McCandless said they want to ensure the revenue is being spent in students' best interest. This includes more class and section offerings, as well as classroom improvements.

Commitment to K-State students is another point of the pair's campaign. Pence said she and McCandless want to be easily accessible to students in order to hear their concerns.

"One thing you're going to see is a lot of David and I," Pence said. "We're not going to get elected and disappear."

"I hope a lot of students will believe us when we say we want you to come talk to us."

Heart, the fourth point in the pair's campaign, comes from the pair's love for K-State and their desire to make it a better place.

McCandless said he thinks students will be able to relate to him and Pence as students and will identify with the issues they are addressing.

"I think we're concerned about a lot of the same issues that most students are," McCandless said.

The pair is beginning their campaign by speaking to various students groups and reaching as many students as possible.

"The more students we can represent, the more students we can give a voice to," McCandless said.

Shots fired at 2 more vehicles along Interstate 270 outside Columbus, Ohio

By Anita Chang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio – A van and a Mercedes were shot minutes apart on an interstate Sunday in a region where a series of 21 sniper shootings have occurred, investigators said.

The gunfire seems consistent with the sniper shootings along Interstate 270 south of Columbus based on initial evidence, said Franklin County Sheriff's Chief Deputy Steve Martin. He stopped short of linking the two shootings to the serial gunfire.

No injuries were reported in Sunday's shootings, which happened about 11:30 a.m. on Interstate 71 near Jeffersonville, about 40 miles southwest of Columbus, said Jerri Redfern, a dispatcher with the State Highway Patrol.

One person has died in the serial shootings, which have targeted vehicles, schools and homes since May.

Authorities were looking for a dark sports car that may have been connected to the gunfire.

Martin said the shots were fired from two overpasses about one mile apart. Witnesses said they saw a white man in his 30s or 40s and a small, dark-colored vehicle on the overpasses. Authorities have said some shots in the previous cases came from overpasses.

Authorities had taken two juveniles with a pellet gun into custody after Sunday's shootings, but ultimately determined they were not connected to the crimes, said State Highway Patrol Lt. Rick Fambro. The youths were in a car matching the witnesses' description, he added.

"Basically it's a case of being in the wrong place at the wrong time," he said. Authorities questioned the juveniles and were releasing them, said Fambro.

One lane of I-71 was closed, backing up traffic for several miles, as police searched the area of Sunday's shootings. Officers were seen examining a van parked at a gas station off I-71 and a car parked on the highway shoulder about two miles away.

Cars, school buses and homes have been fired at on or near a stretch of I-270. A passenger in a car was killed in November.

On Tuesday, a bullet struck the windshield of a van on I-71, which intersects I-270, authorities reported Friday.

Ballistics tests on the bullet fired Tuesday determined that it is one of at least eight to come from the same gun used in the deadly attack, authorities said.

The shootings started in May, although most have occurred since October.

TO THE POINT

Weapons capability not enough for war

The possibility of a country developing weapons of mass destruction is not reason enough to go to war.

In an interview Sunday, President Bush said while no weapons have been found in Iraq, the war is still justified. Saddam Hussein, he said, still had the means to produce these weapons and pass them on to terrorist groups.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Under this pretense, the United States could invade almost any country it wanted.

With globalization and networking, most nations have the capability of weapons-making and could be labeled as a threat to peace.

It seems the Bush administration – pushed into a corner by fiercely campaigning Democrats and falling approval ratings – is showing a crack in the smug assurance it has held thus far.

A more appropriate action would be to admit that although the original pretenses for war were found to be false, Bush still believes the deaths of more than 500 Americans will prove to be worth the sacrifice – although stronger evidence is still needed to convince the rest of Americans of these claims.

Taking responsibility for your actions is commendable and necessary to maintain a dignified administration – especially when the costs are so deadly.

TWO SIDES OF THE STORY: THE RIGHT SIDE AND THE OTHER SIDE

Expressive dress

Skimpy clothing only a reflection of personality

My dad has a crack problem.

Unfortunately, this is something he has had to deal with for as long as I can remember.

LOUIE NOVAK

Whenever he works on a car, does yard work or fixes something around the house, I have to remind him that crack kills.

With this said, I think my dad could argue he was the one who started the "butt cleavage" trend that so many girls sport today.

I can't help but laugh every time I see a girl bend over or sit down and show that they too can't say no to crack.

Skimpy clothing has gone too far with the whole ultra- low-rise pants thing that so many of the ladies wear today.

What are you girls doing?

Going commando and showing me your crack is funny, not sexy.

I can deal with revealing tops and short skirts (I know, big surprise), but butt cleavage is a no-no.

With that out of the way, I am a firm believer that what you wear is a reflection of your personality.

If you are confident in your body and want to show a little something off, then I say go for it.

On the other hand, if the conservative way is more your style, then I dig that, too.

What you wear says a lot about the person you are and gives you a chance to express yourself.

As someone who went to private Catholic schools for 13 years where uniforms were required, I am not going to judge or bash someone for the way they choose to dress.

The way I see it, if the good lord blessed you with a nice set of ta-tas, or if you decided to pay a pretty penny for them, then "let there be cleavage!"

I look at skimpy clothing like a movie preview.

Some draw enough of my interest to make me want to see more, some look all right but just aren't my cup of tea, and others just look awful and leave me shocked, questioning that someone would be dumb enough to assume a sane person would want to see the rest of the show.

All I ask is that the ladies out there be careful with what they decide to wear.

There is a fine line between sexy and trashy, and butt cleavage along with belly rolls are definitely going to get poor reviews from me.

Society should appreciate value of clothing diversity

Why can't everyone remember that clothing serves a purpose?

Cave men and cave women wore animal skins to protect their fur-less bodies from the elements.

NASRINA WILLIAMS

In today's society we tend to think about fashion and aesthetic value before considering the practical necessities of our apparel.

There's nothing wrong with wanting to look nice or express your individuality with clothing.

However, recent trends indicate that for females, looking nice and self-expression is possible only through low-rise jeans, low-cut shirts or midriff-baring tops. Am I the only one who recognizes a problem here?

The problem women face is not, as Mr. Novak indicates, exposing crack or having the culturally endorsed perfect body.

Instead, the problem is the hypocrisy of the standards that women are being held to.

The first double standard is the rule that asks slender women to bare it all while women with "belly rolls" (quoting Mr. Novak) need to remain covered.

First, this standard makes little sense. He enjoys looking at fat tissue when it is on the chest area, so why does the same flesh bother him when on the stomach?

The fact of the matter is that the average woman simply is larger than a size two.

Why should women be made to feel as though their body doesn't measure up to the standards of society? Women come in all shapes and sizes.

Both our society and Mr. Novak need to learn how to appreciate the beauty of diversity.

Another double standard at work in women's fashion is that while women are told to scale down, men aren't held to the same standards.

How often are men pressured to wear super-tight and skimpy clothing so women can "preview" the goods? Men's clothing focuses on function and comfort, while women's clothing is often impractical and inhibiting.

If women are going to be objectified as sex objects through their clothing, then why not men?

Tight shirts give a preview of a woman's breast size, so why aren't there pants that preview the size of a man's penis?

Women should feel free to wear any type of clothing they want.

The body is a beautiful thing, so wear what you desire. While I do recommend taking weather conditions and appropriateness for venue into account, don't let societal pressures restrict your self-expression.

Collegian, you suck.

I can't believe I got snowed in the ditch when I came to school, and then they canceled class on me.

So now, even our chief weapons inspector says that Iraq had no weapons of mass destruction before Operation Iraqi Liberation began. Therefore, our invasion of Iraq had the same moral legitimacy as did Germany's invasion of Poland in 1939.

I can't believe Paul Restivo needs Viagra.

Man, I'm so jealous of how immature and drunk greek people are.

Yeah, in case anyone missed it, I'd just like to sum up Tammy Jo Osborn's article the other day in 700 words — Russian history is nice. That's it.

We just wanted to say thanks to the awesome people that helped us dig our car out when it was stuck in the parking lot.

The best use for the Collegian is traction for my tires.

I'm making T-shirts that say "Thank God for separation of church and state." Does anybody want to buy one?

How many drunk college students does it take to build a snowman? Five, we've tried it.

I've seen at least 10 snow penises today. I love K-State.

Hey, Moore Hall's maintenance man — I wish to thank you for keeping our sidewalks clear while trying to keep up the repairs of the building. Great job.

Thank you for letting girls talk about their underwear. Us guys in Marlatt really like that.

Power of choice

Free market works if consumers refuse to pay high prices

LOGAN ADAMS

A few weeks ago, a dear family member of mine went into the pharmacy to purchase medicine for her child who had the flu.

The medicine prescribed was only enough to last five days.

However, the small quantity did not make it cheap. The price tag was well more than $60. Upon hearing this, my relative exclaimed a few mild expletives and left, refusing to be gouged by the companies that set the obscene price.

She returned home somewhat shaken, both at the price and what she had done as a result. She felt embarrassed.

I am proud of her because she stood up for her rights as a consumer.

A free-market economy is simple. You pay only what you're willing to pay and only for the things you want. If the merchant charges too much, you go to a competitor who offers a better price.

This makes companies compete and work to find more efficient means of providing for you. That's it.

Well, at least that should be it. Unfortunately, several companies are trying to take that power away from us.

By using the advantages of their products and services, several companies have discovered they can raise prices without a significant decrease in sales because they can provide a product few other entities can.

It all depends on the product or service in question. Pharmaceutical companies come out with new products all the time, and of course since such products are patent-protected, they can charge all they want while those who need them pay all they can.

Canadians, though, pay far less for the same drugs, partially because the government subsidizes them.

Recording companies hold practical monopolies on each of the artists whose souls they have under contract and as a result are able to charge people inflated prices.

Utilities, which always have had full control on their respective markets, seem to raise prices whenever they can.

Not to mention what happened on Sept. 11, 2001, when certain gasoline retailers turned profiteers and took sick advantage of the nation's emotional state. Even worse, our attorney general let them off with a slap to the wrist, if that. It is beyond me how such retailers were able to get customers after that.

It's the whole "that's how they get you" thing all over again, only this costs us all much more than the drinks we buy due to the blasted salt on the movie popcorn.

Some people might say price limits or the government paying part of the bill are potential solutions,

Such people need to think again. Price fixing will just make most companies reduce quality and/or stop offering certain products and services altogether.

This would be nothing more than a stroll into socialism.

Have the government pay for part of the tab, and either taxes will increase or other programs will suffer. The only way to make it work is for the American individual to take charge. If you don't want to pay so much for a product, buy less of it or don't buy it at all.

Music albums cost too much? Don't buy them. Medicine costs too much? Go generic or try an alternative (bed rest, chicken soup and your own immune system). The consumer holds the real power in this economy, and it's time to wield it.

There is hope.

As my family member demonstrated, Americans are realizing that this is all becoming a mound of what a certain high school teacher I know called "horse hockey."

You can see the seeds of rebellion blooming in many people – from the young turning to file-sharing for music instead of paying $15 to $20 for overrated albums, to the elderly hopping buses and the border to get cheaper drugs.

There's even a real consumer success story, the wireless communication industry.

Prices have dropped and benefits have increased many companies offerings after the Federal Communications Commission let customers take their numbers with them while switching companies.

Competition works. Free market works. The power of choice works.

We just need to get a few bugs out of the system to allow our economy to work for us for a change.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dorm parking permits shouldn't be awarded based on students' ages

Editor,

I am writing because of my frustration with the unfair system the Department of Housing and Dining Services uses to assign parking permits to students living in the residence halls. Under the system, students are awarded points for meeting different criteria, and students with more points receive better permits.

According to the point system, four points are given for each semester a student has lived in the residence halls, two points are given for his or her class standing, two points are given for age, one-tenth of a point is awarded for each credit hour a student has accumulated and three points can be earned by serving on a Hall Governing Board.

I agree it makes sense to assign points based on class standing, number of credit hours and years spent in the residence halls, because this way students who have contributed more money to the university are being rewarded for their contributions.

However, rewarding students based on the year in which they were born is unfair. Under this system, a 22-year-old transfer student who accumulated 60 credit hours at another institution would receive a better parking permit than a 19-year-old sophomore who spent the previous year paying to live in the residence halls.

Why should this transfer student, who would have paid absolutely no money to K-State before the current semester, have seniority over a student who would have given thousands of dollars to K-State for a year's worth of tuition, fees, books, housing and dining?

If students are to be rewarded simply for being alive the longest, why not also factor in a student's hair color, height and weight? It's equally arbitrary and equally unfair. Housing and Dining Services should be called upon to implement a more reasonable system for assigning parking permits.

K-State women exhibit team effort in win over Colorado

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No. 10 K-State's matchup with No. 11 Colorado was designated "Kendra Wecker Day."

Several fans from her hometown made the trip, and one held a sign that read, "Marysville is proud of Kendra Wecker."

The junior guard was fabulous for the Wildcats in the team's 79-53 victory, and after flirting with a triple-double with 23 points, 10 rebounds and eight assists, it was safe to say that all K-State fans were proud of Wecker.

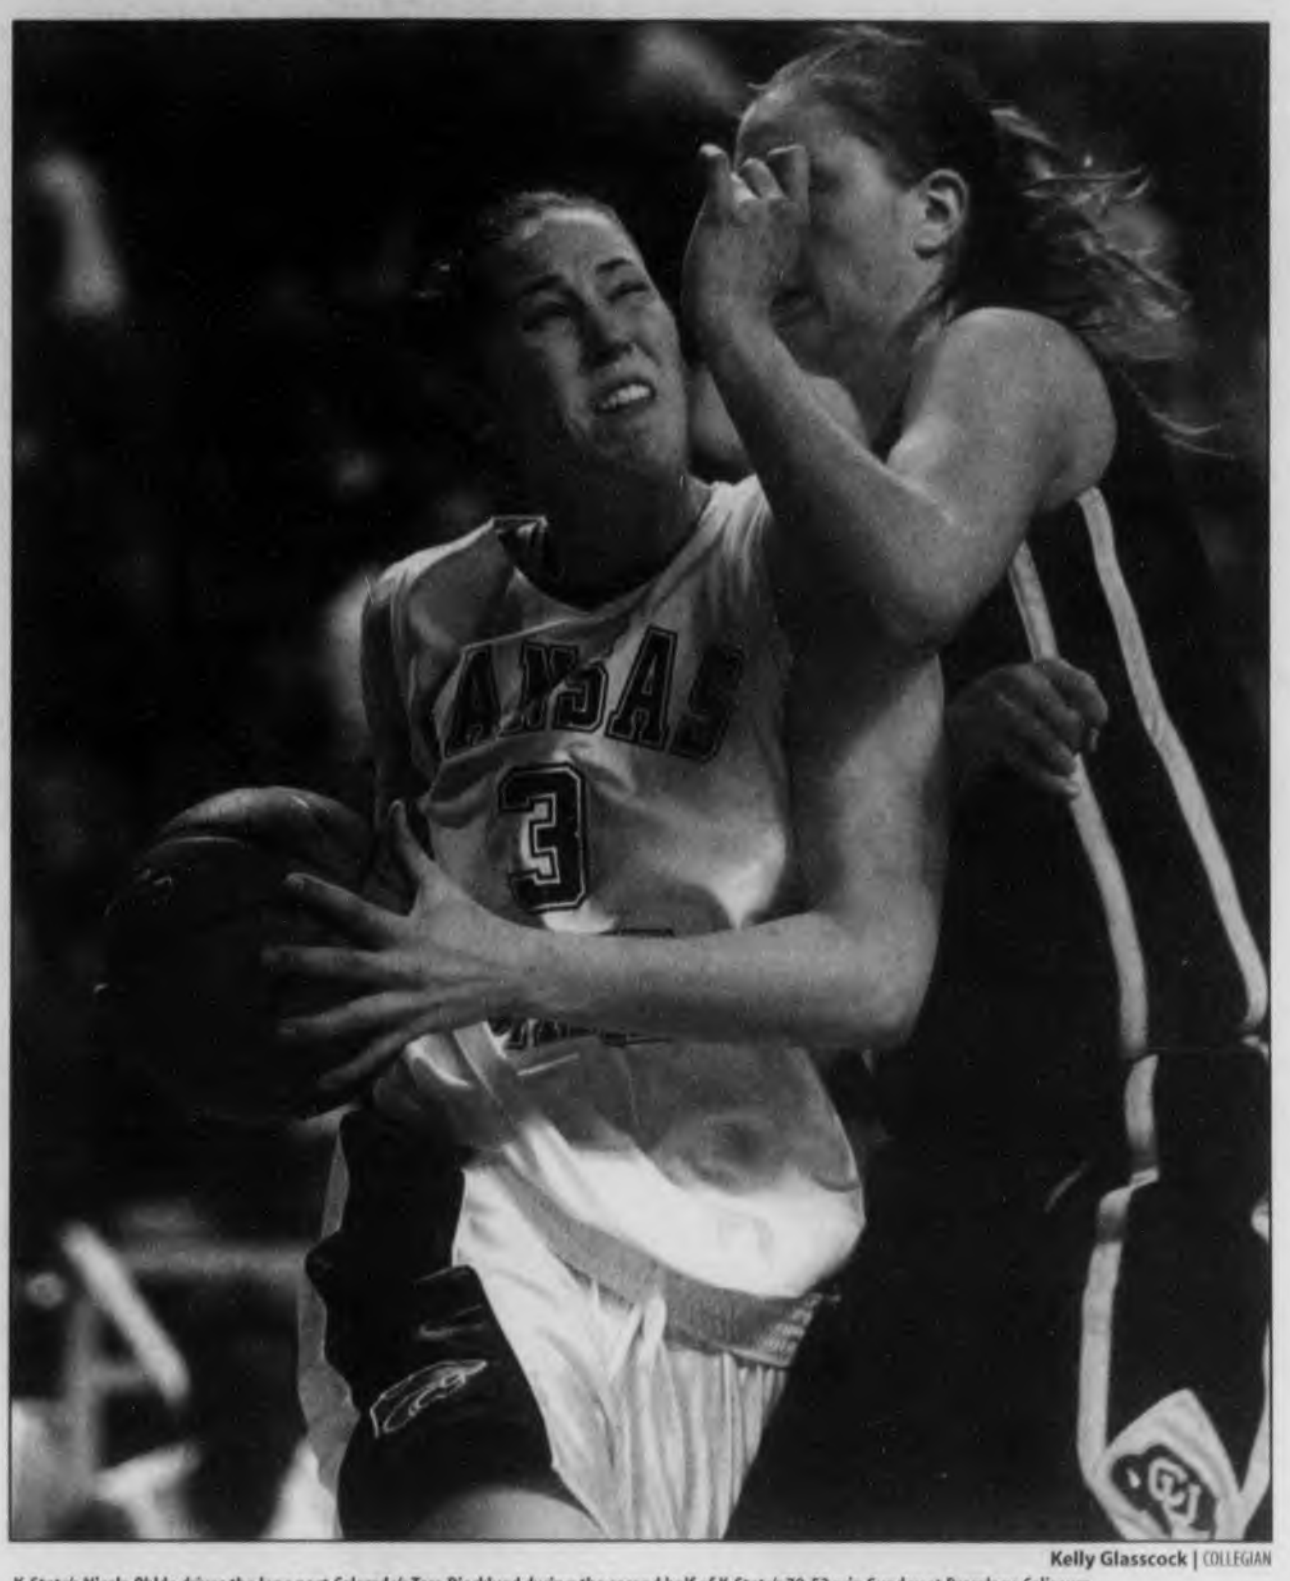
Wecker became the second-fastest Wildcat to 1,500 points by topping the number with her second bucket of the game at the 13:33 mark of the first half.

She finished 8-of-12 shooting from the field and was a perfect 6-for-6 from the charity stripe.

After the game, Colorado coach Ceal Barry said she also was impressed with Marysville's finest player.

"She plays within herself and doesn't force a lot of shots," Barry said. "If you take away the three, she'll drive right by you. She's tough on the boards, she's tough, she is physically tough."

K-State (17-3, 8-1) never trailed Colorado (18-3, 7-2) Sunday and completed a two-game sweep of the Buffs for the second straight season.



The win was the fourth in a row and the 15th in the last 16 games for the Wildcats.

Colorado held Nicole Ohlde, the Big 12's leading scorer at 21.5 points per game, to just 13 points.

However, Amy Dutmer, making her fourth start of the year, scored a season high 15 points by connecting on 6-of-7 from the floor.

Laurie Koehn rounded out the four Wildcats to score in double figures by adding 11 points.

If defense wins games, then that is what the women's basketball team would have had to rely on Sunday when it faced Colorado and the leading scorer in the Big 12 Conference.

Holding a team that, on average, scores 74.4 points per game, Wildcat defense allowed the Buffaloes just 54 points.

"We just came out and played team D," junior forward Kendra Wecker said. "We just tried to hold them."

The 79-54 score was a testament to the Wildcats' play on both sides of the ball, but what particularly impressed Coach Deb Patterson was the way her team defended.

"None of this scoring means anything if you're not defending at a high level," she said. "We had so much respect for Colorado's ability to stretch the defense, especially when you've got Bjorklund in the post."

Patterson's reference was to Colorado senior center Tera Bjorklund, The All-American who averages 19.9 points per game, better than anyone else in the Big 12.

All K-State could hope for was at least containing Bjorklund.

Instead, they stopped her.

"Tera has been tearing up the Big 12," Wecker said. "We were playing on the perimeter with hands up and not allowing easy passes in. We shut a lot of things down that they needed."

Bjorklund ended the game with 11 points, 10 rebounds and two turnovers.

"For me as a center," Bjorklund said, "they were sagging off a lot and when that happens, it's really hard to get the ball, no matter how much you reverse the ball. It's pretty hard when they're sagging off the whole time, but that's when we need to hit the outside shots and try to open up things on the inside."

Colorado shot just 31.7 percent from the field, including 30 percent from beyond the 3-point line.

"Credit Laurie Koehn and Amy Dutmer for knowing where their shooters were," Patterson said. "Defensively, we've grown a lot. We defended extremely well tonight.

"We were better in all phases of the game, but you should be at this point in February."

Wildcat men lose to Colorado in final seconds on last shot

The Buffaloes are full of miracles.

For the second straight game against Colorado (13-7, 5-4), the K-State (10-9, 2-6) men's team lost on a last-second shot.

The Wildcats lost to Colorado Saturday on a last-second 3-point shot in the first round the Big 12 tournament in 2003.

Even with another double-digit outing by junior forward Jeremiah Massey and a career scoring night for senior guard Tim Ellis, it was not enough to defeat the Buffaloes.

"I thought they (K-State) hung in there and still played really well," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "It's really frustrating. It's really tough when you are in a game like this."

After being down by 11 points with 3:49 left in the second half, the Wildcats rattled off nine straight points, capped by sophomore forward Marques Hayden's first 3-pointer of the year, and pulled to within two, 78-76.

Colorado's Michel Morandais then hit two free throws with 22 seconds left to put the Buffaloes up by four, 80-76.

On the next trip down the floor, senior guard Jarrett Hart, who had been 0-for-8 from the field against Colorado, hit a 3-pointer with 12 seconds left and put the Wildcats to within one point.

Then the fun began.

Senior guard Frank Richards stole the ensuing inbounds pass with 10 seconds on the clock and was then fouled, putting him on the line for a pair of free throws. Richards nailed them both and gave K-State the lead 81-80.

"When you stop playing defense, you're going to lose a lead," Colorado coach Ricardo Patton said. "I don't think our team ever believed they were as

Women's tennis team successful with singles play

Success was found in Utah as the K-State women's tennis team ventured on their first road trip of the season.

The Cats, ranked No. 33, dominated the Eccles Tennis Center in Salt Lake City with a 5-2 win over the Utes.

Much of the victory was found during the singles play of the day. Maria Rosenberg and Hayley McIver won in two sets, while Jessica Simosa, Paulina Castillejos, and Judith Diaz defeated their opponent in three sets.

The top singles player, Rosenberg, defeated Utah's top singles, Sheri Esrock, 6-3, 6-4.

Rosenberg, a junior, also was recently named to the Preseason All-Big 12 Conference Women's Singles Tennis Team. She is ranked No. 12 regionally in singles with a record of 2-0.

Although this is not the first K-Stater to be named to the team, Coach Steve Bietau finds the award an honor.

"It is always a great honor for a player to be recognized like that," he said. "Maria has been not only a solid contributor, but she has gotten significantly better each year."

Rosenberg feels that being named to the team is an honor, but that is not her focus.

"I guess I am pretty happy.

Daytona | Track worker killed by race car

A worker at Daytona International Speedway was struck and killed by a paraplegic driver going more than 100 mph during a race for compact cars Sunday.

The worker, 44-year-old Roy H. Weaver III, was standing in the middle of the track picking up debris during a caution period when he was hit by a car driven by Ray Paprota of Birmingham, Ala., track spokesman David Talley said.

Paprota, who doesn't have use of his legs and drives a car equipped with hand controls, was trying to catch up the main pack of cars after a two-car crash at the opposite end of the track brought out a yellow flag. Weaver was struck in turn two on the 2 1/2-mile trioval.

Golf | Singh cruises to Pebble Beach victory

Vijay Singh stood on the 18th green with the crystal in his hands, a trophy he has wanted to hold ever since he first set foot on Pebble Beach.

Singh

It might not be long before he has the prize he really wants, replacing Tiger Woods at No. 1 in the world.

Singh blew away the field Sunday in the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, making birdies on the first three holes, hitting a spectacular 4-iron into the most daunting green on the course and spending the rest of the day soaking up the sunshine on the Monterey Peninsula.

It was his third victory in his last nine PGA Tour events, and his 12th consecutive finish in the top 10, the best record of anyone over the last six months.

NHL | Sakic wins All-Star MVP with hat trick

Joe Sakic is used to playing on a team of All-Stars back home with the Colorado Avalanche.

Sakic

So, it was no surprise to see Sakic look comfortable among the Western Conference stars Sunday. He scored three goals to win the MVP award in the NHL All-Star game.

Sakic scored in each period but it wasn't enough to lift his team, which lost 6-4 to the Eastern Conference. He entered with three career All-Star goals and 15 points in 10 previous appearances.

It was the second straight year that the MVP came from the losing team. Atlanta's Dany Heatley took the honors in 2003 with a four-goal outburst in the East's 6-5 shootout loss.

NFL | NFC takes Pro Bowl with incredible comeback

There was nothing relaxing about this Sunday afternoon in Hawaii: The highest-scoring Pro Bowl in history also might have been the most exciting edition of the NFL's all-star game.

MVP Marc Bulger of the St. Louis Rams threw a Pro Bowl-record four TD passes, and Detroit's Dre' Bly returned an interception 32 yards for the go-ahead score with 4:50 to play during the NFC's rally from an 18-point deficit in the final 13 minutes of a 55-52 victory over the AFC.

And it wasn't over until Indianapolis' Mike Vanderjagt — the automatic kicker who didn't miss a field goal or an extra point all season — was barely wide right on a 51-yard field goal attempt as time expired.

Miraculous failure

Famous storyline lacks character development, accuracy

"Miracle"
★★☆☆☆
Movie review by Christopher Harrop

Courtesy art

Despite a stellar performance by Kurt Russell as the late U.S. Olympic hockey coach Herb Brooks, "Miracle" is merely the latest in a long line of bad hockey films.

Many things have been said about the U.S. hockey team's victory over the Soviet Union at the 1980 Lake Placid Winter Olympics. Some say the victory brought together a nation in despair. Others proclaim it as one of the greatest moments in modern sports. "Miracle" repeats all of these statements with predictable, formulaic incompetence – a death knell for any film based on a true story.

Director Gavin O'Connor should be given credit for assembling a wonderful opening montage of video and sound from the 1970s that builds the reality in which the characters interact.

"Miracle" is a depiction of Brooks' efforts to revamp the U.S. men's hockey team – from the summer of 1979 to the gold medal ceremony in February 1980. A former player denied the opportunity to play two decades earlier (the last time the United States defeated the Soviets), Russell's character is a man on a mission.

Aiding him in this journey are his wife Patti (Patricia Clarkson, "Pieces of April") and assistant coach Craig Patrick (Noah Emmerich, "The Truman Show"). Most of the attention is lavished on Brooks, giving greater weight to Russell's performance. However, it leaves very little room for character development of the 20 players who won the gold.

The lack of character growth is only compounded by the fact many of them were not cast with actors, but rather hockey players. While their skating and ice play looks natural, their dramatic interactions with one another seem forced.

The film, as formulaic as it is, is further brought down by the near-comical motivational idioms for which Brooks was known. Catch phrases about the importance of the team and hard work fall flat, providing barely enough motivational gravitas to inspire an elementary school soccer team, let alone a rag-tag group of college players hunting for Olympic glory.

Russell overcomes the characteristic flaws through an intensity that, while not groundbreaking in the world of sports movies, is uniquely gripping. The suspense of the film's end is virtually nonexistent, but intimate moments in the film of Brooks with his players command more attention than all other scenes.

Attention to detail and accuracy is normally crucial for a film like this – the game has been seen by millions of people through the years. O'Connor sidesteps accuracy by employing a number of dizzying, pseudo-stylistic shots that disorient the viewer, while using Al Michaels' original game commentary as the soundtrack.

"Miracle" also tries to play on American sensibilities of patriotism, with resounding drums and stirring anthems beating out a familiar cadence. However, the film plays much more truthfully without the anthems. Good scenes are ruined many times by the unnecessary orchestral intrusions.

Every hockey movie from here to eternity will be compared to the greatest sports film of all time, 1977's "Slap Shot." While no one should expect greatness from "Miracle," Kurt Russell again shows he can handle serious dramatic turns like that of "Vanilla Sky." Russell honorably portrays Brooks, who lived this incredible story.

French band succeeds with electronic album

"Talkie Walkie"
★★★☆☆
Album review by Jessica Grant

Courtesy art

Although many Americans recently have developed a negative opinion of French people, there are times to put political opinions aside in the name of great music.

This is one of those times.

The French band Air recently released a stellar album worthy of anyone's time. Nicholas Godin and Jean-Benoit Dunckel are the Parisian masterminds behind Air's sixth album, "Talkie Walkie."

The band mixes classicist French pop with 1980s-style electronics and soon will be seen as the figurehead for the late '90s electronic invasion. Many fans were won over by the incredibly sexy 1998 masterpiece "Moon Safari," which helped give Air mainstream attention.

Sofia Coppola fans also might recognize Air from the 2000 movie "The Virgin Suicides." Air recorded the soundtrack that gave them much-deserved attention from American audiences. The song "Alone in Kyoto," taken from "Talkie Walkie," also makes a memorable appearance in Coppola's film, "Lost In Translation."

Air's 2001 release, "10,000 Hz Legend," was a harsh album that fused progressive rock into their eclectic mix.

However, with "Talkie Walkie," Air returned to its elegant, sensual sound. This could have something to do with the producer of this album. For "Talkie Walkie," Air worked with legendary producer Nigel Godrich, the production man behind Radiohead's "OK Computer."

The truly notable songs on the album are "Alone in Kyoto" and "Alpha Beta Gaga." With gentle guitars and a soft, bubbling electronic sound, "Alone in Kyoto" has a lonely sound that quietly leads the listener through a slow-motion daydream.

"Alpha Beta Gaga" is a different kind of song that reflects Air's more playful side. Based on a cheerful melody, the band fuses a whistling chorus over a swirling electronic sound.

The weakest point of "Talkie Walkie" is lyrical content. Though many electronic artists choose not to meld lyrics into their sound, Air does pull words into a few of their songs. Through heavy French accents, Godin and Dunckel croon about love, loss and the universe. Many of the lyrics are cliché, but this is related to Air's grasp of the English language.

Though "Talkie Walkie" isn't as smoldering as "Moon Safari," it still sets the mood for any Valentine's Day tryst.

Manhattan restaurants offer couples' specials

SETH BISHOP

At the end of this week, we celebrate the holiday of love: St. Valentine's Day.

Valentine was a priest in Rome during the third century. Emperor Claudius II had outlawed marriage to have more single men for his army, but Valentine defied the emperor and continued performing marriages for young lovers. During his incarceration, Valentine fell in love. His final letter to his love, the first valentine, was signed "from your Valentine," a phrase still in use today.

Modern lovers find themselves in less deadly circumstances, but peer pressure and opinion still can force many to keep their love secret. Every moment away from my true love is as torturous as being shackled to a Roman prison wall. And the true torture, most lovers agree, would be never being together again.

Was Valentine's true punishment the separation from his love, or the prison diet of maggoty bread and fetid water? This is a food column, after all!

Here are three of Manhattan's establishments offering special menus or value packages for Valentine's Day.

Rambler's Steakhouse offers tasty appetizers and great steaks every day, and, yes, love can bloom even surrounded by a western saloon motif. Their special Valentine's menu includes Steak Chateau for two with sautéed mushrooms and Bernaise sauce, steak and lobster or glazed grilled salmon. For dessert, molten chocolate cake with ginger ice cream.

Harry's Uptown also is offering a special Valentine's menu served in its own classy style. The Gold Fork has a Valentine's package of dinner for two off the menu and a guest room for the evening for $149.95.

There is a wealth of dining options in the surrounding communities that offer an evening to remember.

Marysville, Kan., is home to the Koester House restaurant. This historic restaurant offers delicious food in a decorative and fashionable environment.

The Kirby House restaurant in Abilene, Kan., is a delicious option to the west.

Council Grove, Kan., offers the Hays House, and further south in Cottonwood Falls, The Grand Central Hotel gives excellent service, delicious food and the option of extending your Valentine's dinner into breakfast.

The food served is clearly a main component in a romantic dinner, but sights, sounds and smells are all equally important. Adjust the lighting, control the music and reduce the chatter of the other tables to a minimum. Yes, I am suggesting the ultimate romantic dinner is at home.

Check Tuesday's Collegian for pointers on romantic dining at home.

Beyonce wins 5 Grammys

OutKast, Coldplay big winners at award show

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES – Balladeer Luther Vandross, recovering from a stroke, won four Grammys on Sunday, including song of the year for "Dance With My Father," and Beyonce earned a record-tying five honors.

OutKast won album of the year for "SpeakerBoxxx/The Love Below" in a ceremony televised by CBS on a five-minute delay to avoid anything like Janet Jackson's Super Bowl flesh flash.

Despite a tightly scripted show devoid of outrageousness or spontaneity – a marked contrast to today's pop scene – Jackson's breast-baring at the hands of dance partner Justin Timberlake remained the major subplot, as CBS and Jackson offered conflicting reports about why she was not at the show.

"I know it's been a rough week on everybody," said Timberlake, stifling a self-deprecating laugh while accepting the best male pop vocal performance award for "Cry Me a River."

He brought his mother as his date. "What occurred was unintentional, completely regrettable, and I apologize if you guys are offended."

Vandross won for best song, best R&B album and best male R&B performance for "Dance With My Father"; and best R&B performance by a duo or group with vocals for "The Closer I Get to You," a remake he did with Beyonce.

He was unable to attend, but sent a videotaped message, his first public remarks since his April 2003 stroke.

Beyonce tied a record for female artists with her five awards, but won none of the top categories of song, record or album of the year.

Rockers Evanescence won best new artist in an upset over rapper 50 Cent who briefly walked onstage as Evanescence accepted their award.

"Thank you, 50," said Evanescence's Amy Lee as the rap star smiled for the camera.

The 46th annual awards show began at 4:55 p.m. – five minutes before airtime – with Prince performing "Purple Rain," marking the 20th year of the groundbreaking song and movie.

Beyonce, wearing a tight dress with a feather skirt that fleetingly revealed her pink panties, joined Prince on his hits and then sang her own "Crazy in Love," which won two awards for best R&B song and best rap/sung collaboration.

Beyonce also won best female R&B performance and best contemporary R&B album for "Dangerously in Love," and best R&B performance by a duo or group for her song with Vandross.

Her five trophies tied a record set by Alicia Keys, Norah Jones and Lauryn Hill for the most Grammys won by a female artist. "This is unbelievable. Performing was enough for me," an excited Beyonce said.

OutKast, nominated for a leading six Grammys, won three: best album, best urban/alternative performance for "Hey Ya!" and best rap album for "Speakerboxxx/The Love Below."

REC CENTER | Complex sees increase in students during winter months

Elaine Schmeltz, senior in landscape design, and Ben Warren, junior in family financial planning, said they noticed an increase in students, but they haven't been having problems getting machines or a parking spot.

"We usually get lucky, so it's not that bad," Schmeltz said.

Despite the high numbers, Grunstad said there is no limit on how many people can be in the Rec Complex.

There is also no limit on the amount of students allowed in aerobics classes.

Grunstad said officials have created two more classes because of the increase in students.

The increase in visitors also means an increased usage on machines. However, Grunstad said, the machines are not breaking more frequently than before.

"Obviously, as something gets used, it's going to wear down," she said. "We have someone who repairs the machines when they break down, but when the computer on the equipment breaks down, we send the machine in to the company for repairs."

Free weights also are becoming worn, and Grunstad said they are looking into finding more durable free weights that can better withstand usual wear and tear.

Grunstad said although there are more students using the Rec Complex, there have not been any problems.

"The students are respectful of the facility," she said. "They are here to come and work out, and they realize that if they abuse it, they won't have it."

WEAPONS | Bush: War justified

The interview, his first on a Sunday talk show since taking office, came as the president's approval rating has dipped to 47 percent, according to an Associated Press-Ipsos poll taken in early February; that compares with 56 percent just a month ago.

The appearance followed weeks of criticism from Democrats over the failure so far to find Iraq's cache of weapons.

"They could have been destroyed during the war," Bush said, speculating about reasons the reports might have been wrong.

"Saddam and his henchmen could have destroyed them as we entered into Iraq.

"They could be hidden. They could have been transported to another country, and we'll find out."

The president said he retained confidence in CIA Director George Tenet.

Bush shook his head from side to side when asked if Tenet's job was in jeopardy. "No, not at all, not at all," Bush said.

Bush pledged to cooperate with a commission he set up last week to examine prewar intelligence lapses and defended its March 2005 reporting date, which is four months after the White House election.

"There is going to be ample time for the American people to assess ... whether or not I made the right decision in removing Saddam Hussein from power," Bush said.

Democrats in Congress and on the campaign trail said Sunday that they wanted to see the findings before the election, if possible.

"What we've got here is a president who simply doesn't want to be held accountable," presidential hopeful Wesley Clark told CNN's "Late Edition."

Bush did not directly respond to election-year allegations that his administration exaggerated intelligence, but made clear that the United States considered the Iraqi president a dictator who brutalized and killed his own people.

Bush expressed indifference about polls that showed him trailing the Democratic frontrunner, Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts. "I'm not going to lose," Bush said.

"I don't plan on losing."

CAMPAIGN 2004 | Vietnam memories define candidates' careers

horrifying and disruptive way," he wrote in his 1999 biography.

"By the time the ball dropped in Times Square to welcome 1968, the situation in Vietnam had escalated from a conflict to a raging war. Every night the newscast included a body count."

Bush debated his options during Winter break back home in Houston, took a pilot aptitude test after he got back to school in January, and chose the National Guard.

He would fly planes like his father did in World War II, but he had to know the odds of going to Vietnam were low.

Nearly 40 years later, the choices made by these two young men are reverberating through the presidential campaign as part of a larger debate over patriotism, leadership, duty and character.

Each man is defined in part by the path he chose, and by the level of commitment he demonstrated along the way.

"We are all hostage to decisions we made in the past," said Douglas Brinkley, a history professor at the University of New Orleans who has written a book about Kerry's war years.

"The bottom line is Kerry went and Bush didn't and it's an uncomfortable fact for a president" who has so eagerly wrapped himself in the flag as commander in chief.

Yet Brinkley said the two-year age difference between Kerry and Bush is an important backdrop to the courses they set.

In 1965, when Kerry decided to enlist, students "still saw the world in black and white," Brinkley said.

"Did he want to go to Vietnam? No. But how could he live with himself if he finagled his way out of his duty?"

By the time Bush joined the guard in 1968, Brinkley said, the sentiment against the war was hardening.

"By 1968, smart kids weren't going. It became OK not to go. ... So Bush looked for a way not to go," he said.

"If he had been the class of '66, it may have been different for George W. Bush."

WOMEN | Cats extend home winning streak to 9

Ohlde broke yet another Wildcat record in Sunday's win.

With her third rebound of the game, Ohlde became K-State's all-time leading rebounder. The senior finished with five boards giving her 926 for her career.

K-State extended its overall home winning streak to nine games and is making Bramlage a scary place for opponents.

K-State has won 14 straight at home in the Big 12, including all five this season, and has won 29 consecutive regular-season games in Manhattan.

After the game, Coach Deb Patterson said the win was a total team effort.

"When you look at the assist numbers, you need to understand that that is Kansas State Basketball at our best," Patterson said. "People were sharing the ball. We had a lot of distribution in our shots, and that's the way we like to play. I thought today we made great reads, got the ball into the right hands at the right time and finished shots."

TENNIS | Women's team beats Utah

It's a good beginning," she said.

Although the singles seemed to be successful for the Cats, the doubles matches were somewhat disappointing.

"It wasn't one of our better performances. We didn't play well in any of the doubles positions," Bietau said.

He said the day was controlled by the singles matches, and the competition was similar to Wichita State.

In the doubles round, the Utes captured two of the three matches.

"We just started to play well late. We were already down and it was hard to come back," sophomore Jessica Simosa said.

The Cats will be on the road again Feb. 13, as they will travel to Iowa City to take on the Iowa Hawkeyes.

DEFENSE | Rebounding, intensity help K-State thrive

For the 16th time in 19 games K-State outrebounded its opponent.

The Wildcats grabbed 40 boards compared to the Buffaloes' 35. Wecker led the way with 10.

"We played with defensive intensity and also played man-to-man most of the second half," Wecker said. "Just playing defense made the difference along with putting bodies on people and not letting them get second and third shots. We tried to keep our hands up and active and moving."

That intensity has made K-State what it is and placed the team where it is, Colorado coach Ceal Barry said.

"They're not going to give us the little things," she said. "And that's why they're highly ranked and pre-season picked to do as well. They're not going to beat themselves.

"You can't count on them giving you a little edge here and there. Those are some of the things we depend on."

MEN | Last-second curse befalls Wildcats again versus Colorado Buffaloes

good as I said they were."

Patton decided not to take a timeout after the Richards free throws, citing the fact K-State had no timeouts left.

"We didn't want to call a timeout with 10 seconds left on the clock, because K-State didn't have any timeouts, and I didn't want to give them a chance to set up their defense," he said.

Colorado guard Jayson Obazuaye took the inbound pass and dribbled the full-court driving into the lane, with two Wildcats hounding him, put up a desperation shot with 3.6 seconds to go.

The shot rattled around the rim and fell, giving the Buffaloes the lead and the victory, 82-81.

"It was a tough shot. He went in there and made a hard shot," Wooldridge said.

"We had two players contend the shot. They all went in. But we were not able to get it done."

The loss was K-State's seventh straight on the road this season and is the 20th consecutive conference road loss for the Wildcats.

Ellis led the Wildcats in scoring with 25 points on 10-of-15 shooting and had five rebounds.

Massey scored in double figures for the third time in four games with 21 points and shot 50 percent from the field.

Despite the loss, Wooldridge said Massey had another solid game for the Wildcats.

"I thought he played a quality game for us.

"That's been our deal throughout the year – you never know where your offense will come from.

"The last couple weeks it's been Jeremiah, but we need to get some other guys in there," Wooldridge said.

Man confined without bond

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan man who accidentally shot himself in the thigh Wednesday was arrested Sunday morning for previous charges.

Jacob Mendenhall, 25, 814 Leavenworth Apt. 4, was arrested just before noon Sunday for possession of cocaine with the intent to sell within 1000 yards of a school, criminal possession of a weapon, possession of opium, 12 counts of burglary, 12 counts of conspiracy to commit burglary, possession of marijuana with the intent to sell within 1000 yards of a school, felony of paraphernalia, one count of theft, and making false information.

He is being confined without bond.

Riley County Police Captain John Doehling said the charges Mendenhall faces are for recent cases and he assumed Mendenhall was arrested on follow-up charges.

Mendenhall originally told police he was shot and robbed while walking in the 300 or 400 block of Moro Street early Wednesday afternoon.

After further investigation, it was revealed Mendenhall actually had been riding in Ronnie D. Owensby's vehicle when he accidentally discharged the weapon, which had been reported stolen.

On Friday, Owensby, 2310 Kraig Road, was arrested for criminal possession of a firearm, conspiracy to commit burglary, possession of stolen property and possession of a depressant.

Owensby was released on $5,000 bond.

Greek Affairs continues investigation

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Greek officials said Monday that a recent incident where a fraternity member was locked in the trunk of a car was unintentional.

Laura Osteen, interim Greek Affairs adviser, said the incident involving a Beta Theta Pi member was not a prank, as was reported by the Riley County Police Department.

"We have concluded an initial investigation, and at this time, we have not found any evidence that would support the claim that the incident was a result of hazing," Osteen said in a press release Monday.

Osteen said after the initial investigation, Greek Affairs believed it was an unfortunate incident, and not a prank as previously reported by Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the RCPD.

Although the initial investigation is finished, Osteen said Greek Affairs will not close the case until all details have been considered.

"We will continue to work with the chapter and the national organization to ensure that all details and events of the evening have been explored and appropriate disciplinary action is taken, if necessary," she said.

Osteen said, to her knowledge, no one has been charged in the incident, and although she hasn't met with Michael Farrell, who was locked in the trunk, it is her understanding there is no animosity between him and the fraternity.

Fast-food chains' switch to late hours means 24-hour diners becoming sparse

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sources for late-night food runs, while a staple of college students, have become scarce in recent years with the closing of Country Kitchen two years ago.

Since then, Village Inn has gone from being a 24-hour eatery throughout the week to staying open around the clock only on the weekends.

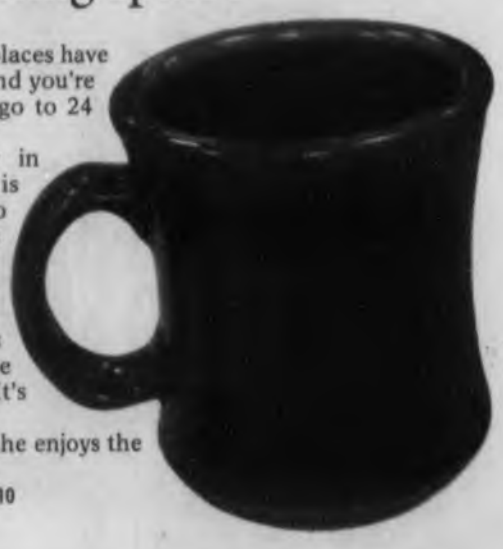
In a college town, this leaves a sour taste in the mouth of many students who leave the bars looking for late-night dining options.

"Another 24-hour spot would work really well," said Melissa Poggie, junior in journalism and mass communications.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said another such establishment would work in Manhattan if there were more jobs that required what he calls "third shifts" – in essence, a graveyard shift.

"A lot of it is driven by market conditions and what the need is in the community," Butler said. "A lot of those communities have third shifts in various businesses. Manhattan hasn't had a lot of third shifts where a lot of people would be out and about late at night, working."

Butler also cited many fast-food chains' late hours as a reason why the community would have difficulty supporting another 24-hour restaurant. McDonald's and Sonic are examples of chains that have extended their hours in recent years.



"Some of the fast-food places have gone to extended hours, and you're seeing some retail stores go to 24 hours," he said.

Betsy Willhite, senior in public relations, said she is one of those students who chooses to use the services of other late-night food venues because of the convenience.

"I'm more of a Gumby's person myself," Willhite said. "That's our spot. It's right next to the bars."

Poggie said that while she enjoys the

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

Readers want more

AMY LINK

Amy can be reached at aml7555@k-state.edu

More, more, more – that's what the readers want.

Whether it's the need for more coverage, more games, or just more copies, readers just aren't getting enough.

"We need more things to do. It would be nice to have some other games along with the crossword puzzle. It would make the paper interactive," one reader said.

More quizzes and trivia have received more play in the Collegian this semester.

The staff understands that many students rely on the Collegian for a much-needed break between those long lectures. It is our goal to keep you entertained and informed.

Readers can find a quiz every Wednesday on Page 2. And the Edge is another place to spot trivia or quizzes.

Another common reader concern is why the Collegian devotes more coverage to one area than another. For instance, one reader said she did not understand why a special section is devoted to basketball while other competitive groups don't receive any coverage.

One of the common misunderstandings of newspapers is that they are only a service to the community. However, they are also a business.

As a business, they must devote the coverage to what most students want to read.

However, it is up to the readers to tell the staff when we're missing something they want to read. If your team has competed and you think it would make a good story, feel free to contact the campus editor, Amy Preston, at preston@k-state.edu.

Another reader wondered why the cross country and track teams seemed to be overshadowed by other sports such as football and basketball.

The reader said she understood space may be a concern but thought a simple graphic of the placings would suffice.

Some sports receive limited coverage due to a limited availability of sources.

Finally, many readers wonder why they can't get a copy of the Collegian.

Director of Student Publications Ron Johnson said the Collegian has a press run of 11,000 copies.

"We have nearly 150 drop-off points, primarily on campus, but also near campus, at locations frequented by students.

"We also heavily stock the K-State Student Union. That's a good suggestion, if you need a paper," he said.

Fort Riley medical company deployed to Iraq for the next year

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This will be the second time Spc. Adam Mercandetti goes to Iraq.

In a ceremony Monday night, Mercandetti and about 150 other soldiers of the first deployment unit officially were deployed.

Lt. Col. Bryant Harp, commander of the 36th Medical Evacuation Battalion, spoke at the ceremony.

"They are the very best medical company I've ever seen," he said.

Maj. Gen. Dennis Hardy also spoke at the ceremony.

He said they will have "to go in harms way often, to go where no one else is going."

Hardy said that when the first unit was in Iraq, more than 1,000 rescues were made, and things had not changed.

"It's not a much different place in a not much different time," he said.

The soldiers will confront danger, he said.

"We are sending them in harms way," he said. "But they are trained soldiers, skilled soldiers and fit soldiers, led by confident leaders. They are diverse professionals who can respond on a moment's notice."

The soldiers will be deployed for at least a year, but could be asked to stay longer, Hardy said.

"We will do everything we can to make sure they are taken care of," he said.

Mercandetti said he was proud to serve his country for a second time in Iraq.

"There's a bit of regret leaving loved ones behind, but I am happy to be serving my country," he said. "When you are over there, it makes you miss everything back home."

One of those loved ones is his girlfriend, Virginia Roberts, who recently switched from reserve to active duty in the Army. She said they met at the medical barracks.

It was hard to let him go, she said.

"I'm still not taking it well," she said.

For others, this is the first time leaving the country.

Patti Young, mother of Pfc. Matthew Young, said her son had hardly been outside of his home in Iowa, besides being stationed in Kansas.

"I'm afraid for him, but I know he's going for a good cause," she said.

She said he has only been in the military since last March, but it has had a positive effect on him.

"He's very confident," she said. "He believes in what he's doing."

Matt's aunt, Joyce Young, said he was ready to go.

"We're excited for him, especially for the opportunity to serve his country," she said.

But, she said, it was difficult to hear that he was going to leave.

"It's been hard on his parents," she said.

Kelly Glasscock | COLLEGIAN

Virginia Roberts kisses her boyfriend, specialist Adam Mercandetti, after a deployment ceremony at Fort Riley Monday night for troops leaving for Iraq. The troops are expected to be there for at least one year.

Nicole Flye, wife of Sgt. Roosevelt Flye, said her husband has been in the military for 16 years, and this was not the first time she was going to be separated from her husband. But this separation is more difficult to take.

"This one is a little different because he's actually going to be in the line of fire this time," she said.

"This one is a little nerve-racking."

She said their son, who is 17, understood that Roosevelt would be gone for a long time, but her daughter, who is nine, does not know what is going to happen.

"She kind of doesn't understand that her father is going to be gone for a long time," she said.

Taco Bell generates record revenue

Restaurant makes $1,000 more a day than Eddie Peppers

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Back by popular demand, the K-State Student Union Taco Bell has been busier than expected since its re-opening.

"It's doing much better than expected," Gayle Thober, senior food service director for the Union said. "We are very pleased with the number of transactions we've had."

Thober said students have been very satisfied with the return of Taco Bell and that satisfaction has shown up in the sales figures.

"As compared to Eddie Peppers, it's probably doing $1,000 more a day," she said.

Thober said there have been lines, but she thinks the staff of the Union and Taco Bell have handled things wonderfully.

"The lines tell me we made the right decision," she said. "We did the right thing to bring back Taco Bell. We never had lines with Eddie Peppers."

She said the business is actually seeing better sales this semester than it did prior to replacing the restaurant with Eddie Peppers.

"When they were here the first time, I think their record day was around $1,700," Thober said. "Their opening day this semester was over $2,000."

Thober said she hadn't had time to analyze the numbers, but on first glance, the other restaurants in the Union were not seeing a significant decreases in sales as a result of the surge of Taco Bell's numbers.

"I just think students here like Taco Bell," she said. "It's a staple in their diet."

Bernard Pitts, director of the Union said he was extremely pleased with the restaurant's performance.

Pitts said the numbers only go to show the students were right.

"I'm glad we had the flexibility to provide the students with what they wanted," he said.

Dayna Hull and her roommate, Kate Allred, senior in art therapy, both said Taco Bell is a very important part of their daily routine.

"I just love it," Hull said. "It's so cheap and it fills you up. You can get a great meal for $3."

She said she never had a desire to eat at Eddie Peppers while it was in the Union.

Allred said her favorite menu item is the double-decker tacos.

"Every day, we just have to get up and get ourselves some T.B." Allred said.

Organization collects books for Iraqi schools

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When students aren't able to sell back a textbook, they usually do one of two things.

They either throw it away, relieved to never have to see it again, or they put it on a book shelf and leave it to collect dust.

Students now have another option.

In an effort to help further the higher education of Iraqi women, the KSU Women in Engineering and Science Program is organizing a textbook drive. Textbooks will be donated to the College of Science for Women at Baghdad University and Baghdad Technical University.

"The libraries are empty, and they need books because of looting and burning and all of the destruction of the war," Ahlam Al-Rawi, interim director for WESP, said.

The concept of an international textbook drive was introduced to Al-Rawi by former colleagues in Baghdad.

Al-Rawi said the idea appealed to her because she wanted to help people from her homeland.

"I want to them to see what's going on and appreciate what they have," Al-Rawi said. "When you compare your situation to a woman in Iraq, you think, 'Oh my God, I have everything here.'"

Jennifer Whitlock, junior in bio-agriculture engineering and program director for WESP, said the group was unsure of how many people would help, but is pleased with the results so far.

"So far it's been a really good response," Whitlock said. "There's a lot of support out there."

Al-Rawi estimated they have collected 40 boxes of books, or about 500 books total.

Though no official deadline has been set for the drive, Al-Rawi would like to finish it by the end of February.

Once the books have been collected, they will be sent to Michigan and given to the charity organization LifeUSA, which will send the books to Iraq.

One of the challenges the book drive is facing is raising money to cover the cost of shipping to Michigan.

The cost will be about $20 for every 70 pounds of books.

To help with the cost, WESP is hosting a dinner for students, faculty and staff featuring traditional Arabic cuisine and live music.

Al-Rawi said she wants the book drive to be a success because the students in Iraq are so eager to learn.

"They are really excited," Al-Rawi said.

"They have nothing but are dying to seek knowledge and to learn more."

How to Donate books to Iraq

- Books can be deposited in Seaton 125.
- You can also call 532-3395 to have them picked up.
- Make sure the books are no more than four years old.
- Any textbooks are accepted, but science and engineering books are preferred.

TO THE POINT

Tracking feed will prevent another mad cow scare

The mad cow scare is ending, but American beef is no safer unless precautions are taken.

The Agriculture Department has called off the search for the additional 11 head of cattle that were most likely to have eaten the same feed given to the only known U.S. case of mad cow disease.

Although officials say these remaining animals represent "little risk," it still leaves Americans wondering if their beef is safe.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Although the USDA could begin mandating new laws, such as the "trace-back" system, an identification program in which every cow and bull would be tagged at birth and tracked throughout its life, these practices would prove financially impossible for small cattle producers.

First, the USDA needs to enforce rules already pertaining to the materials in cattle feed. Second, if new laws are passed, they must should focus on tracking the buying and selling of cattle feed.

In 1997, the FDA banned the addition of cow meat and bone meal to cattle feed. Had feed producers adhered to this law, mad cow would not be a problem in the United States.

Monitoring feed producers more closely could be effective in keeping mad cow from surfacing in the United States again.

Lessons of war

Candidates with military experience show personal investment to U.S.

BARBARA MEYER

I remember when being patriotic was unpopular. I know you all do, too.

Like the day I told my ninth-grade teacher that if I could pick anywhere in the world, I'd live right here in the United States. She nearly died.

I can't really blame her: those were the days of Whitewater, Monicagate and the O.J. Simpson trial. America was going to hell, again.

And then came Sept. 11, 2001.

Suddenly there were bumper stickers and T-shirts and "Support Our Troops" banners everywhere.

A wave of patriotism made it very cool to love America, and bills with catchy names like the Patriot Act made it easy to violate American rights and get away with it.

As a new wave of elections looms, the issue of patriotism has become critical, with each candidate claiming to love America more and better.

This phenomenon isn't new, and for politicians of this era, the litmus test of patriotism often comes down to military service during the Vietnam War.

Heads up to you political hopefuls – 40 years from now, that test might be Iraq.

Dan Quayle, Bill Clinton and Howard Dean are only a few of the candidates in recent years whose evasion of service in Vietnam has called their patriotism and leadership into question.

Some argue that what candidates did while America was at war, whether dodging bullets in the jungle or snorting cocaine in Texas, has no bearing on their ability to lead the nation decades later.

I disagree.

I'm not saying military service should be a prerequisite for holding office, but the choices these candidates made tell us a lot about their values.

Those who fought, as well as those who actively opposed the war, risked their freedom and more because they believed in something other than their own comfort.

Many of those leading us today fought tooth and nail, but rather to obtain cushy positions in the National Guard or medical deferments for mysterious injuries. They didn't protest, they didn't fight; they ducked.

According to the U.S. Census, there are 7.7 million veterans from the Vietnam Era.

That's compared to an estimated 500,000 who evaded the draft.

There is no shortage of people who can back up their patriotism with military service.

Politicians who were too busy to serve America back then have no place serving our country now, when the salaries and perks are more to their liking.

However, voters have a penchant for picking the chicken hawks.

Bob Dole was wounded in action during World War II, but lost his presidential bid to accused draft-dodger Bill Clinton in 1996.

John McCain didn't even make it past the primaries, losing his bid for the 2000 nomination to George W. Bush, who went AWOL from stateside National Guard duty while McCain was being held in a POW camp in Hanoi.

Mr. National Guard went on to beat Al Gore, another man who actually served in Vietnam, albeit in a non-combat position.

Georgia Sen. Max Cleland, also a Vietnam veteran, lost his race against Saxby Chambliss in 2002 after Chambliss ran an ad comparing Cleland to Osama bin Laden.

Cleland was unable to stand up to these attacks because he lost both legs and his right arm in Vietnam. Chambliss received a medical deferment for a "bad knee."

Shouldn't it count for something that these candidates fought for America when it wasn't popular, convenient or even safe?

These are the people who weren't just cheering from the bleachers on a rainy day in November – they were playing ball.

For those of you keeping score at home, Kansas is represented in Congress by two veterans, Pat Roberts and Dennis Moore.

Of the nine congressional leaders, Sen. Tom Daschle is the only from either party with military experience of any type.

While those who burned their draft cards put their freedom on the line for their views, our veterans risked everything.

They aren't fair weather Americans.

They have invested something of themselves in our country.

With seven presidential candidates remaining from both parties, there's not going to be a draft for that any time soon.

If these silver-spoon candidates couldn't be bothered to show up for duty when they were actually needed, they're not qualified to serve as commander in chief now.

For that office and others, we should elect Americans who put their patriotism into practice.

For my vote, give me a veteran.

Bush exhibits survivalist mentality when making important decisions

JONATHAN LAMB

I think I know what's going on in our President's mind.

That's right, I said it.

I feel like the man who awoke one morning to realize that Burt and Ernie are two adult males who share a bedroom. It hit me with a jolt not dissimilar to the shock of swaying accidentally into the cold, bacteria-ridden wall of a residence hall shower while trying to wash one's feet.

President Bush has been given so many labels that they are difficult to organize into a helpful bulleted list – from the self-applied "compassionate conservative" of the 2000 election to the retroactively applied "radical opportunist" and Michael Moore's "fictitious President."

I want to suggest the addition of another label, one that very few – only myself and possibly political philosopher Leo Strauss, though I abhor the connection – would think to ascribe: desperate survivalist.

First, we have this "colonize the moon" business. Two weeks ago, James Hurla criticized the notion of a lunar space station, asking the question, "what practical purposes can this serve?" Having gnawed at length on that question like rabid chickens gnaw on human flesh, I have concluded there can be only one practical purpose.

Survival.

In a 2001 public lecture in Mumbai, India, professor Stephen Hawking shared his belief that "if we don't destroy ourselves in the next 100 years, I expect we will spread out to planets in the nearby solar system and then to nearby stars."

In other words, Hawking suggests that unless we begin to "spread out," the possibility of self-annihilation will always remain.

George W. Bush is no dummy (pause for raucous laughter and for you to wonder if I'm serious). Even if he were, he's certainly smart enough to recognize the veracity of Hawking's remark as well as the survivalist mentality on which the notion of a lunar colony hinges, especially given the high cost of such an expedition. It is that mentality that drives his advocacy of the lunar colony.

And speaking of costly enterprises, the war in Iraq is another case that demonstrates his survivalism.

At this point, as you are all aware, hardly anyone denies that oil was and is a major motivational factor, not to mention an emergent benefit, of our presence in Iraq.

Bush, it seems, was labeled "radical opportunist" for a good reason.

He is not a brainless half-wit, though he often plays one on television. He knows that in 10 to 50 years – no one is really certain how long – supplies of oil will dry up faster than you can say, "OPECtastic."

He knows when wells begin to run low, a U.S.-friendly Iraqi government and a sizable, unilateral "security force" will ensure that the nozzles here in the homeland continue to squeeze that nectar of industrial life that keeps the roadways fuming.

He knows this, and it is difficult to deny the genuine desperation implicit in his response to such knowledge. That is to say, because he is terrified at the thought of a United States debilitated by the absence of fossil fuels, and because his convictions apparently stipulate that war is the best possible solution, here we are at war in Iraq.

Admittedly, there are more matters on Bush's mind than merely survival and more motivations for action.

Nevertheless, if we consider his administration's other policies in light of the survivalist mentality, we gain a peculiar insight.

Why promote heterosexual marriage? To propagate the species and compete with China's population.

Why cut taxes and incur a gargantuan deficit?

I'll have to get back to you on that one.

USDA ends search for contaminated cattle

By Ira Dreyfuss
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Agriculture Department is ending its search for additional cases of mad cow disease even though officials have not found several animals suspected of having eaten the potentially infectious feed.

"Our investigation is now complete," Dr. Ron DeHaven, the department's chief veterinarian, said Monday.

"We feel very confident the remaining animals, the ones we have not been able to positively identify, represent little risk."

The closure leaves officials not knowing what happened to 11 head of cattle among 25 that authorities say were most likely to have eaten the same feed as that given to a Holstein diagnosed in Washington state with mad cow after it was slaughtered on Dec. 9.

All 25 were among 81 born on a farm in Alberta, Canada, and shipped into the United States in 2001.

Officials have found 29 of the 81, including 14 considered most at risk.

The search for the 81 cattle led authorities to 189 farms and ranches and the testing of 255 animals, none of which had bovine spongiform encephalopathy or BSE, the technical name for mad cow disease, DeHaven said.

Some may have gone to slaughter, but BSE tests would have spotted any slaughtered animal that had mad cow, he said.

The likelihood of finding more cases "is pretty slim at this point," DeHaven told reporters during a telephone conference.

An international review panel created by Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said last week that U.S. officials had done a thorough job of searching for the animals.

The government also has found 2,000 tons of rendered protein into which tissue from the Holstein could have been mixed, said Dr. Stephen Sundlof, director of the Food and Drug Administration's Center for Veterinary Medicine, which regulates animal feed.

The material is being destroyed, Sundlof said.

Letter to al-Qaeda asks for help in sparking Iraqi civil war

By Jim Krane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – A letter seized from an al-Qaeda courier shows Osama bin Laden has made little headway in recruiting Iraqis for a holy war against America, raising questions about the Bush administration's contention that Iraq is the central front in the war on terror.

The 17-page letter, cited as a key piece of intelligence that offered a rare window into foreign terrorist operations in Iraq, appealed to al-Qaeda leaders to help spark a civil war between Iraq's two main Muslim sects in an effort to "tear the country apart," U.S. officials said Monday.

One senior U.S. officer, Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, warned the plea could mean more "spectacular" attacks because the rebels were despairing that their devastating car bombs and the steady killing of U.S. troops were failing to shove the Americans from Iraq or spark massive discord.

The letter was believed written by Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, a Jordanian suspected of al-Qaeda links.

Al-Zarqawi is the chief suspect in several recent bombings, and the Bush administration cited his presence in Iraq as evidence of Iraq's terrorist connections even before the war.

Having found no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, the administration has been shifting the reason for going to war to the fight against global terrorism and to oust Saddam Hussein.

Military and coalition officials who rarely speak about intelligence information were quick to describe the letter as proof of a terrorist role in the Iraqi resistance.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said that the letter, first reported Monday by The New York Times, shows that "Iraq is the central front in the war on terrorism."

"There are foreign terrorists who realize the stakes are high and they seek to do everything they can to undermine the aspirations of the Iraqi people," McClellan said. "But democracy and freedom are taking root in Iraq and there's no turning back."

The letter, as quoted by the Times, acknowledges problems in recruiting Iraqis to join the fight against an American force "growing stronger day after day."

"Many Iraqis would honor you as a guest and give you refuge, for you are a Muslim brother," it said. "However, they will not allow you to make their home a base for operations or a safe house."

That suggests that Iraqis may be willing to support their homegrown insurgency but have little interest in backing foreign infiltrators. The letter's appeals for outside help raises questions whether al-Qaeda had a support network here before Saddam's downfall.

There is little to bind Iraqi rebels to foreign terrorists other than a common wish "to bloody the United States," said David L. Phillips, a former State Department expert on Iraq, now with the Council on Foreign Relations.

"There are far more Iraqis who are resisting American occupation than there are al-Qaeda operatives inside Iraq," Phillips said.

"Most violence against the U.S. in Iraq is being committed by so-called dead-enders and Iraqis who resent the U.S. occupation."

The al-Qaeda presence has consistently been exaggerated, Phillips said.

The top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, Rep. Jane Harman of California, said al-Qaeda is in Iraq because of the American presence there.

"It's a good organizing tool," she said in an interview. "One of their big targets is America. There's a large American presence in Iraq."

Top U.S. commanders have previously said that the Iraqi resistance sees al-Qaeda as an unwelcome presence.

For the most part, commanders have said, the conflict is a homegrown guerrilla war waged primarily by Saddam supporters and Iraqis angry over foreign military occupation.

Nevertheless, the Bush administration and coalition spokesmen here portrayed the letter as proof that Iraq was on the front lines of global terrorism.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said the letter shows terrorists haven't given up in Iraq.

"They're trying to get more terrorists into Iraq and they're trying to create more terrorist organizations to try to defeat our purposes," Powell told reporters. "But they will not succeed."

Al-Zarqawi, the letter's purported author, is the top suspect in the 2002 assassination of U.S. diplomat Laurence Foley in Amman, Jordan.

The letter writer's claims that he directed 25 suicide bombings in Iraq are being taken seriously, said Kimmitt, the deputy chief of operations.

"We feel he is the most capable terrorist in Iraq today," a U.S. official said of al-Zarqawi.

KSU sports fully funded despite small budgets

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only 4 percent – about $1.1 million – of the K-State Department of Athletics' budget comes from the state of Kansas in the form of state dollars, salaries and student fees.

Through various means, including ticket sales, Big 12 Conference rewards and other sponsorships, the other 96 percent, or about $31 million, is generated from within.

With such a small budget and a low number of varsity sports in a huge conference like the Big 12, Bob Cavello, associate director of athletics for business operations, said what K-State accomplishes with what it has is quite uncommon.

"Our 16 teams are fully funded," he said. "Other schools don't have teams as fully funded. Knowing the budget constraints that exist here, I basically look at our teams' success. People are No. 1 – we have great coaches and great teams.

"If you look throughout this conference, you see big fat money schools that aren't competing with Kansas State top to bottom."

The process to figure out the athletic budget, at $32,165,488 for fiscal year 2004, begins between January and February of every year. After adding fixed costs such as tuition, health care and salaries, the athletics department begins to build on assumptions beyond its control, such as rankings, T.V. appearances or postseason play.

Once projected costs are figured, revenue generation and the returns on investment are calculated, and the final number is established.

The overestimates have been a large part of the department's success, finishing in the black at year's end every year since 1995.

"We have always taken a very conservative approach and have been aggressive in projections on expenses," Cavello said. "It's a challenge that we strive to, and it's been an equation for success to follow that philosophy."

Athletics department officials ask a member from each department or team to come up with their own numbers for the money they will need for their individual department and then take responsibility for that money throughout the year.

"It's fund management," Cavello said. "That begins with our philosophy of developing it and monitoring it throughout the year. If an unknown hits, they know how to fix it. Everyone is the individual owner of their piece."

The owner of the largest piece is the football team, receiving $8,188,217 for 2004.

Cavello said the team generates somewhere around $11 million and $12 million each season.

Staff Reports

Big 12 | Massey named Rookie of the Week

K-State's junior forward Jeremiah Massey was named Rookie of the Week in the Big 12 Monday.

Massey

Massey averaged 22.5 points in two games on 17-of-30 shooting and averaged 8.5 rebounds last week.

In the 78-61 win over Nebraska, Massey scored a career-high 24 points and five rebounds in 36 minutes.

The Detroit, Mich., native was also instrumental in the near upset of Colorado Saturday, scoring 21 points and pulling down five rebounds.

Massey leads the Wildcats in scoring (13.9), rebounds (7.7) and double-doubles (five).

All-Stars missing best rookie

JOSH WITT

Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, children of all ages prepare for a night of fun and excitement.

Sunday it's the NBA All-Star Game on TNT!

Feast your eyes on some of the best basketball players in the world – McGrady, Iverson, Garnett, Shaq and ... Jamaal Magloire?

That's right folks, the phenom who is the New Orleans Hornets' Magloire is an NBA All-Star this year.

All right, so I am being a little sarcastic.

But the biggest surprise in the coaches' selection of the NBA All-Star reserves is not the addition of the mediocre center Magloire.

Somehow, rookie sensation LeBron James was left off the Eastern Conference roster.

Are you serious?

Silencing the doubters who said he would never live up to the hype straight out of high school, James has taken the league by storm.

He has showcased a complete, all-around game with averages of 20.6 points, 5.7 rebounds and 5.9 assists per game.

James ranks in the top 15 in the league in scoring and assists. He's put up these numbers on a horrible Cleveland team.

The reasoning behind the James' snub is this – when the NBA coaches select All-Star reserves, they have to pick at least one legitimate back-up post.

In a conference severely lacking in the big-man department, it is said that Magloire was the only option.

I don't care, and I don't think the millions of NBA fans worldwide do either.

Some things in sports and life require a bending of the rules, and this is one of them.

It shouldn't matter how many posts or guards are on the All-Star roster.

The best 24 players in the NBA should have a chance to take the floor regardless of position.

It's an All-Star game. An exhibition. No player or team is better or worse off after the game is completed.

The game is for the fans, and that is where the coaches got it wrong.

Ask any fan who are the most exciting players in the NBA, and I bet a majority mention the name LeBron.

He should be on the floor Sunday, plain and simple.

Though Sunday's All-Star game still should be good, most will likely walk away feeling it could have been better.

And call me crazy, but I don't think watching Magloire will be a consolation.

Tracksters set personal bests at meet Saturday

By Matt Stuchlik
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats had a strong showing at the Sevigne Husker Invitational Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

A handful of the nation's top schools and athletes were on hand. During the meet, many K-State athletes set personal records.

"There were a lot of athletes that were expected to perform well, and they did. There were also those athletes that didn't do as well as they could have," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"That is what is going to happen in sports, but this was not a team scored meet, so the players were only competing for individual scores."

K-State sophomore pole vaulter Breanna Eveland hit the qualifying mark for the NCAA Championships. She recorded a career-best of 13 feet, one-quarter inch, which was also the second-highest mark in school history.

It was only a provisional qualifying mark, which means she will be added to a list of vaulters that have jumped over 13 feet. To attend the NCAA championships she will need to be toward the top of the list.

Other Wildcats came close to qualifying for the NCAA Championships.

NHL | Panthers GM steps down as coach

Hoping to spark a surge that ends with a playoff berth, Florida Panthers general manager Rick Dudley made his second coaching change of the season Monday.

This time Dudley's out, and assistant coach John Torchetti is in.

Dudley, who took over as coach when he fired Mike Keenan on Nov. 9, gave up the job to focus on his GM duties. Torchetti will make his debut as an NHL head coach Tuesday at home against Montreal.

The young Panthers (18-23-11-3) began the week nine points behind in the race for the final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference, but they have a favorable schedule down the stretch.

Torchetti becomes the Panthers' fifth coach since 2000.

CFB | Canes' top recruit violated probation

An arrest warrant was issued for Miami's top recruit on Monday, accusing him of violating his probation while on a recruiting visit to Florida last month.

Willie Williams, 19, has been charged with misdemeanor battery by state officials in Gainesville after a woman said he hugged her without permission. That charge spurred the issuing of an arrest warrant in Broward County, where Williams is on probation for pleading no contest to felony burglary in 2002.

Williams' 18-month probation term was to end Wednesday. He now may face up to five years in prison, the maximum on the burglary charge, plus an uncertain future with the Hurricanes.

Ryan

The Hall of Famer decided not to sign a new personal services contract.

He spent his final five seasons (1989-93) with the Rangers, throwing the last two of his seven no-hitters and recording his 5,000th strikeout. His pitching contract included the post-playing career deal to make appearances on behalf of the team.

"This was an extremely difficult decision for me," Ryan said in a statement. "Ultimately, I decided that I just could not make the necessary time commitment to have a meaningful and expanded relationship with the Texas Rangers."

Rangers owner Tom Hicks was disappointed but understood Ryan's decision. The two met several times to discuss a new contract.

"Nolan is a very close friend and a member of the Texas Rangers family, and he always will be," Hicks said.

MLB | Johnson argues salary arbitration with Expos

Nick Johnson and the Montreal Expos argued their salary arbitration case Monday, with the first baseman asking for a fourfold increase to $1.68 million.

The Expos argued that Johnson should be paid $1.25 million. He made $364,100 last season with the New York Yankees .

'80s revival

Retro fashions making comeback

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They're coming back: Trucker hats, leg warmers, plastic jewelry and everything '80s.

There have been comebacks from the '60s and '70s, but are we in the middle of an '80s fashion revival?

"Yeah, I think so," Melesa Lorett, senior in apparel design, said. "It started to come back a couple of seasons ago with the '80s colors, plastic, gaudy jewelry and leg warmers. But hopefully, tight-rolled jeans and the big hair won't return."

Lorett said fashion is constantly evolving and changing. She said that not just the vintage clothing, but the influences of '80s fashion have seeped into new designs.

"My designs aren't big with the '80s," Lorett said. "I've included some ruffles and layering that was seen in '80s clothes in some of my designs. You'll see some stuff come out this spring that definitely has an '80s vibe to it."

Lorett said the change in fashion is based on changing tastes and sometimes the news media. She said the trends of the '60s and '70s made it only logical for the '80s to come next.

"We've pretty much gone through all of the decades, and now we're sort of combining them all," Lorett said. "We went through a stage where we tried to make everything as tight and short as possible, but now there is more poofy and loose clothing."

Richard Harris, professor of psychology, said it is typical for a generation to develop a feeling of nostalgia. He said the media plays a big role in influencing some of the trends.

"The media tends to play into these revivals," Harris said. "It's easier to get into it with some of the retro shows on VH1 and MTV that play old things. It recycles some of the influences and it encourages it."

Harris said these trends can help people relive the past. He said it can be a form of comfort, but sometimes the past gets distorted.

"In these trends, people tend to pick out what we thought was cool, or what the media perceived to us as being '80s and cool," Harris said. "It influences all sorts of styles that come and go – music, architecture and design.

"However, we don't always have the same feelings, such as the nuclear arms race and other things like that that happened at the time. We tend to pick and choose the good times."

Melody Boltz, owner of Grand Ol' Trunk, said she has had a hand in supplying all sorts of fashion crazes.

"The '80s style is definitely the main thing right now," Boltz said. "The styles always seem to go around and around and around. Like Capri pants – we had those when I was younger, and then they came back.

"It seems like somebody on a show, or in a band, wears something, and people like it and these things keep coming back."

Boltz said even with the constant change in trends, they have enough clothes, with more than 60 tons to sort through.

"We've had demands for the '60s and '70s stuff," Boltz said. "Last year it was bowling shoes, and now the big thing is '80s and snap shirts.

"If someone knows they need something, if they let us know in advance, we can look harder for it. That works out well."

Lorett said with the trend starting to gain momentum, it's important to know how to dress for it. She said if people find something they like, they can mix it up with what they already have, and it can be more effective.

"Personally, I hate tight-rolled jeans, but I love leg warmers," Lorett said. "Lots of layers can be effective, such as tights with leg warmers, a skirt over jeans or fishnet stockings. It's really good to mix with what you have now."

POLO SHIRTS: Ralph Lauren polo shirts were all the rage, but polo shirts in general were big, too. Polo shirts are one of the fads from the '80s that have endured the test of time.

MEMBERS ONLY JACKETS: They made a statement of social status, and they are still generally easy to find in thrift stores. There is a reason for this, however — you might be one of the last "members" of this fad if you decide to purchase one of these.

'80S FASHIONS: WHAT STYLES COLLEGIAN EDITORS HOPE WON'T COME BACK

Matthew Girard: Shiny parachute pants, because M.C. Hammer was never, ever cool.

Kristi Hurla: Neon jogging suits. They're just plain ugly, and only little kids and fat people wore them.

Amy Link: Belts on exercise outfits, because if your workout clothes are too big, why are you working out?

Sarah Rice: The side ponytail. That's just too much weight on one side.

Amy Preston: The side ponytail. Because if you wear the same hairstyle for two years, you need to change.

Nasrina Williams: Teased-up bangs with loads of hairspray, because it looks like a bird's nest on your head.

Corbin H. Crable: Tying a yuppie sweater around your neck, because it looks like your clothes are trying to kill you. Sadly, there are still people in Leawood who do it.

Lindsey Bauman: Slap bracelets, because I don't want to be outdone. I had the best one: leopard print on neon green.

Edie Hall: Spandex. It's a privilege, not a right.

Katie Lane: The T-shirt ring, because your shirt is forever molded into that shape.

TEAR IN JEANS: Big for both men and women; immortalized by '80s rockers from Bruce Springsteen to Billy Idol.

TIGHT-ROLLED JEANS: One of the most embarrassing fads that we still admit to enjoying back in the day. It cut off the circulation in your legs, but who cares? You looked rad.

Lighting, music key to romantic Valentine's dinner

SETH BISHOP

I am a man writing about romance.

All right, stop snickering.

Valentine's Day is a once-a-year attempt at romance endured by men to make the women they love smile.

It takes nearly a full year for embarrassment to subside and to muster the courage for another go.

Romance, according to my collegiate dictionary, is defined as an exaggeration or fabrication that has no real substance.

Evidently, Noah Webster struggled with some embarrassing Valentines of his own. He finally defines it thus: to seek to gain favor of, as by flattery.

Enlightenment! That is our task at hand: to seek to gain favor.

Every nuance must be tailored for her pleasure. I'm not talking home remodeling here. No need to call Paige Davis or have the "Queer Eye" team rooting through your closets.

For starters, set the mood.

MUSIC

Background music is a must – something you both like, but something soft. Aerosmith is, hands-down, the all-time best musical group ever, but "Dude Looks Like a Lady" will never be mood music.

LIGHTS

Dimming the overhead is not enough, nor having a few candles burning. One thump of her shin on the coffee table or sauce down her blouse because she can't see, and you can start planning next year.

Lower the lamps or drape fabric over them to soften the glow, and place the candles so their lights overlap slightly. Maybe we need those "Queer Eye" guys after all.

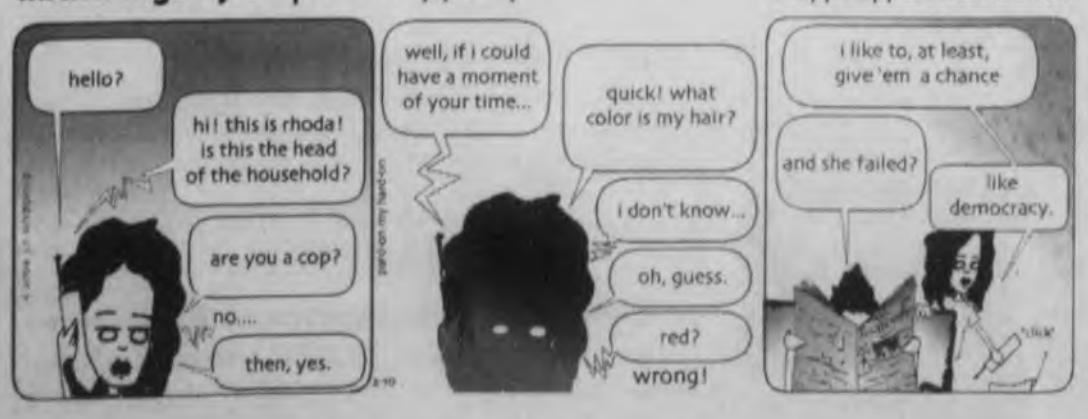
And finally, you serve dinner. The sexiest, most romantic, most intimate dinner you have ever served – this Valentine's Day will flare throughout history, not fizzle into obscurity.

The passion of the evening culminates in three little words: feed each other.

Offering morsels to one another is both intimate and sexy, romantic and playful.

Keep in mind your choices should reflect a certain level of class. Cheese and crackers are boring and overdone!

SUGGESTED MENU



- Parmesan puffs with a marinara dipping sauce
- Crab legs dipped in warm butter
- Steamed asparagus sprinkled with seasoned salt
- Cheddar mashed potatoes
- Angel food cake and fresh fruit with chocolate fondue

Always keep bite-size portions and ease of feeding in mind. Using broccoli flowerets in place of asparagus is fine, but use nothing you have to cut.

Cracking the crab or cutting the steak, if you prefer, is the only work involved. Everything else is relaxed, sublime and heavenly.

Beatles' songs endure 40 years after 'Ed Sullivan Show' appearance

By Larry McShane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – It was black and white, and watched all over.

In the days when hardly anyone had color television, on Feb. 9, 1964, the Beatles appeared live in the living rooms of 78 million Americans – four out of every 10 – on "The Ed Sullivan Show."

The Sunday night shindig incited a massive pop culture upheaval.

"People put seeing the Beatles on 'Ed Sullivan' with memories of where they were when Kennedy was shot, or when man first walked on the moon," said Bruce Spizer, author of "The Beatles Are Coming."

"It was the first time Americans got to see the Beatles perform live. For that reason, this is the image embedded in our minds."

Those iconic snapshots of John, Paul, Ringo and George remain familiar today: The black suits and moptop hairstyles; McCartney and Harrison sharing vocals and a microphone; their still, almost formal bow forward after they played.

The Beatles' five-song performance was nothing less than a life-changing experience for many, said Little Steven Van Zandt, Bruce Springsteen's longtime sidekick and disc jockey extraordinaire.

"This was the main event of my life," recalled Van Zandt, whose Sunday night syndicated radio show will feature mostly Beatles songs this week.

"It was certainly the major event for many others, whether or not they knew it at the time.

"For me, it was no less dramatic than aliens landing on the planet."

The Beatles had only beamed down from Liverpool, and they landed on a Pan Am flight at Kennedy International Airport.

The Sullivan show received 50,000 requests for tickets, while its Broadway theater (now the home of "Late Show With David Letterman") held just 728 people. Beatlemania was in full roar, thanks mostly to screaming girls.

By the second weekend of February, "I Want to Hold Your Hand" – three weeks after its release – was No. 1 on the U.S. charts.

The entire country was waiting for a glimpse of the band.

In an America without cable television or pay-per-view or niche audiences, there was just one place to see them: the Sullivan show on CBS.

"There's no equivalent of that today, TV shows that literally everybody watched," said Van Zandt, who was 13 at the time.

"All ages, all ethnic groups, all in black and white on a 14-inch screen."

At 8 p.m., Sullivan opened the show with these words: "Ladies and gentlemen, the Beatles. Let's bring them on."

His voice disappeared amid the screams, and the Beatles began.

The Beatles would do four more Sullivan gigs, none more important than the first. Six years later, the band was history. But 40 years later, with Beatlemania now middle-aged, the effect of that first Sunday night with the Beatles still resonates.

"It was their sound, their looks, their attitudes," Van Zandt said. "It was so many things. A time to look at things differently, question things a little bit."

Charles Tasnadi | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Beatles face the media at Idlewile Airport (now JFK) in New York on Feb. 7, 1964, after a welcoming by a screaming crowd estimated at 5,000, 40 years ago today. The Pan Am flight from London was carrying a revolution in the shape of four shaggy-haired musicians from Liverpool. Over the next two weeks The Beatles stormed America, appearing three times on "The Ed Sullivan Show" and playing concerts in front of thousands of fervid fans. By the time they flew home, the Fab Four were the most famous band in the world, and the nature of celebrity had changed forever.

Business initiative creates 831 new jobs

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The opportunities for K-State graduates interested in staying in Manhattan broadened due to a Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce program, Advantage Manhattan.

The program was created in 2002 and is expected to bring about 2,000 new jobs to the Manhattan area.

As of the end of fiscal year 2003, the program has created 831 jobs.

It has generated $22.9 million from new and expanded companies. The money will be used to benefit the community.

Lyle Butler, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said Advantage Manhattan is a five-year program designed to create new jobs and economic growth in the community.

"We are just trying to create opportunities for K-State students who graduate from college and want to stay in Manhattan," he said. "That is the same for Manhattan Area Technical College, Manhattan Christian College and the area school districts."

The focus of Advantage Manhattan is to attract more private primary sector jobs, or jobs that are not run by the government and are full-time salary positions in manufacturing, technology and other fields.

Butler said the project doesn't focus on private sector jobs, or government jobs, because Manhattan depends on Fort Riley and K-State and is ready to become more independent.

"I think it's necessary to diversify our work opportunities," he said.

Butler said Advantage Manhattan is not focusing on secondary sector positions, or jobs that are usually in the retail or service industry, because the primary sector jobs will attract secondary sector jobs.

As of Dec. 31, 2003, Advantage Manhattan has created 556 primary sector jobs and 275 secondary jobs.

Butler said they raised $2.1 million for the project and budgeted to spend about $400,000 a year.

They have spent about $800,000.

Advantage Manhattan also projected to increase the average per-hour wage of primary sector jobs by 10 percent.

Jeanine Lake, director of information services at the K-State Alumni Association, said there are many graduates who live in Riley County.

"There are 6,320 K-State graduates in Riley County, and 400 of them own a business," she said.

K-State alumna and owner of the Manhattan Advertising Agency, Deanna Hall, said the Advantage Manhattan program will bring many changes for Manhattan.

"I think it's important to keep Manhattan vital," she said.

"Even though changes may cause problems, I don't think we can just sit and not do anything. I've lived in Manhattan all of my life. I've seen it change and grow a lot, and I've always thought, in general, it's been for the good."

Other goals of the project include increasing the number of private sector jobs by 5 percent and creating a new capital investment of $200 million.

"This would be the cost of building a facility and the equipment that would go into the building for a primary sector job," Butler said.

Advantage Manhattan also is involved with the downtown redevelopment project that will be completed in about five to seven years.

"There will be a net increase of about 300 living units downtown," Butler said.

"They are talking about senior housing, single family housing – housing that would be in a variety of different price ranges."

Butler said he is pleased with the progress that has been made by Advantage Manhattan.

"I expect that over the next couple of years the numbers will continue to increase," he said.

- There are 140,071 K-State graduates worldwide.
- Of these graduates, 6,320 live in Riley County.
- Four hundred own a business in Riley County.

Taxes can be filed online or with tax agencies

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As tax season approaches, there are many options for rookie tax-payers.

E-FILE

With this option, filing is as easy as getting on the IRS Web site.

Go to www.irs.gov and click on the E-File link to get started.

On the Web site, there is a link to search for a Free File company. There will be a list of companies that will describe who is eligible for their free service.

Some people will not be eligible to file on E-File for free. It depends on each person's situation and each filing company's eligibility requirements.

Sharon Daniels, office manager at H & R Block, said she recommends the E-File option to everyone.

"Whether they file with us or not, everyone should file electronically," she said. "It saves time and it's much more accurate."

TELE-FILE

This option is available to those who have received a Tele-File package in the mail.

Individuals must meet the following requirements as listed on www.irs.gov:

1. You are still using the same address that is printed on the Tele-File Tax Record. If you chose direct deposit, you can still use Tele-File if the address is incorrect.

If you go

Help with taxes

What: Tax assistance provided by the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance group.
When: Every Wednesday and Thursday night from 3 to 8 p.m. beginning Feb. 11.
Where: International Student Center on Wednesdays, Manhattan Public Library on Thursdays.
How much: Free

Sources: International Student Center and the Manhattan Public Library

2. You must file single or be married filing jointly and have no dependents.

3. You had income only from wages, salaries, tips, taxable scholarship or fellowship grants.

4. You have received unemployment compensation.

5. You occurred an interest of less than $1,500 and no withholding deduction.

6. You have Alaska Permanent Fund Dividends.

7. You have a total taxable income of less than $50,000.

CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT

Jody Portuese, owner of Bluestem Financial Management, said she offers a student rate of $30 for Kansas residents.

"They get their federal and Kansas returns prepared for that amount," she said. "That includes all of their education credits and student loan interest deductions."

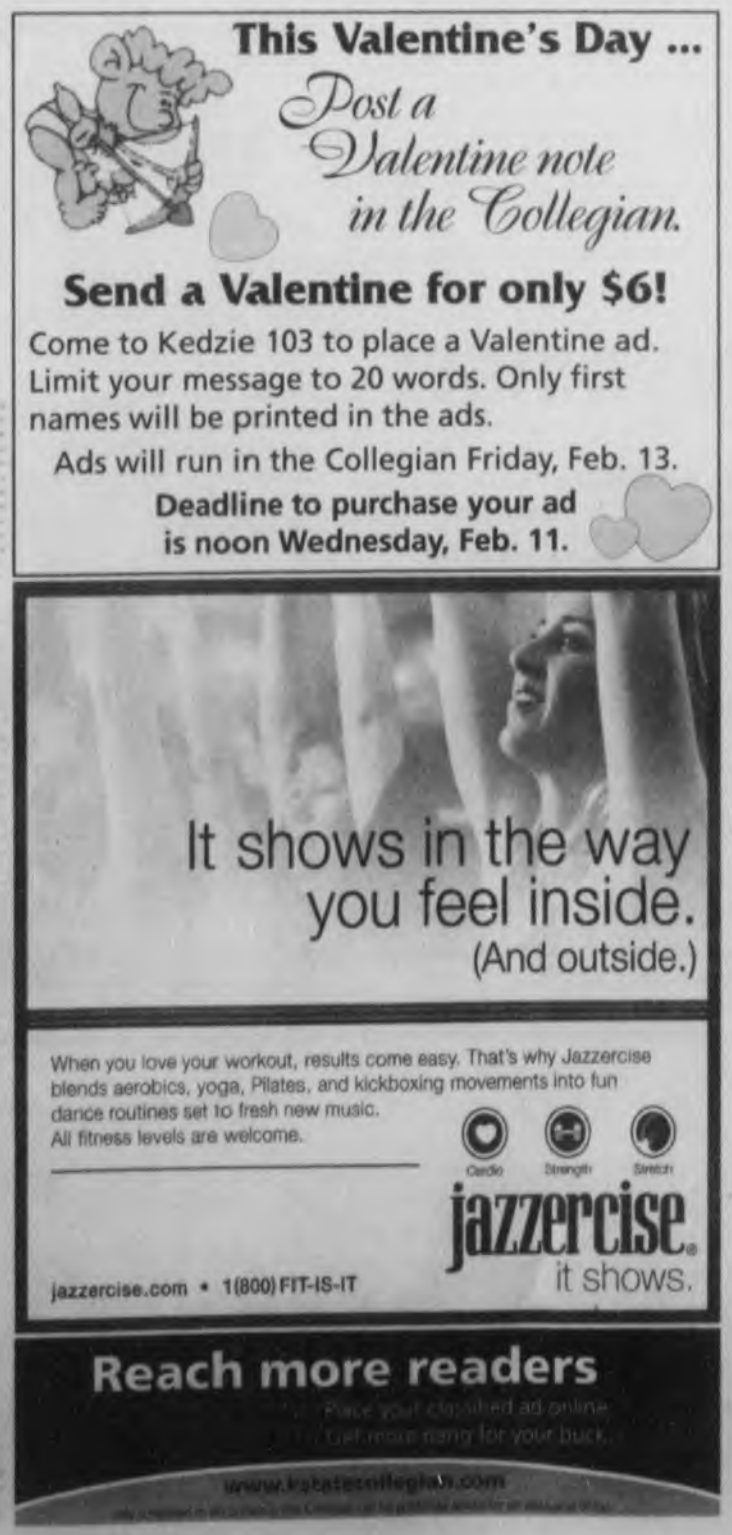
Portuese said this is the most basic return and more complex forms will vary in price based on the information.

TAX AGENCY

Agencies such as H&R Block offer several options, including electronic filing and a refund anticipation check.

Daniels said they do three types of Refund Anticipation Loans. The first one is called Instant Money.

With this option, the client can ask that the bank the company uses loan them all or a portion of their refund within three minutes.



There is also the Direct Deposit RAL, which puts the amount of the RAL directly into a savings or checking account.

Daniels said a RAL costs more because of the additional paperwork involved and the interest on the loan.

Another service H&R Block offers is the Refund Anticipation Check. Daniels said this option allows a client to have their fees withheld from their refund check so they do not have to pay ahead of time.

However, Fred W. Smith, CPA and instructor of accounting, said he would advise students to avoid RALs.

"They charge you a lot of money for that," he said. "You have to ask yourself what it's worth to have that money faster."

BUDGET | Ticket sales biggest source of revenue

"Football is the engine that pulls the rest of the train around here," he said. "They have pulled the load for a long, long time."

Although the football team's budget nearly quadruples the total of the nearest sport, men's basketball, all athletic teams understand the logistics of the situation and the return on investment that football produces for itself and the other 15 teams in the program, Cavello said.

"They understand the trickle down that occurs with the success of football," he said. "It generates all kinds of money that can be used, and is used. Teams are traveling, teams are outfitted in gear, and we are a fully funded Division 1 athletics operation.

"There aren't any teams that are going without. Do they have enough to compete? I think our records speak to that. It's because of the people that we have here."

One of the football team's more significant contributions to the athletics department over the years has been its trailblazing of a pipeline between Manhattan, Kan., and Eugene, Ore., home of the Nike Inc.

Since its initial support of outfitting the Wildcat football team, Nike now has deals with the football and men's and women's basketball teams and in-house accounts with all other teams except volleyball, which wears the Adidas brand.

While no money is made from these deals, Cavello said he considers the contracts to be "cost avoidance," as Nike is not paying K-State but it is wiping out the expense of having to pay for equipment and attire.

"They give it to us free of charge," he said. "We are there because of football, they got us in the door with Nike. It's an expense eraser. Cash money or wipe out expenses, either one is good."

The top producing women's sport is the women's basketball team that will produce a $500,000 return on a $1,717,181 investment for 2004.

The biggest source of revenue for the department comes in the form of about $12 million in ticket sales.

Another six million come from Big 12 Conference revenues and fund raising. Retail and commercial operations usually generate between five and seven million.

Although the Big 12's money provides around 18 percent of K-State's budget revenue, any money that any Big 12 school takes in must be shared equally among the other 11 schools in the conference.

"Conference revenue you mainly project on how many times you'll be on TV," Cavello said. "Sometimes, you can get way out there but every time we've been on TV, more than we had budgeted. Even though your past history says you've been on TV so many times, you need to be conservative."

Many of the increased budget numbers and profit margins came with the arrival of current athletics director Tim Weiser, who arrived in Manhattan in March 2000.

The budget, which was about $23 million at that time, has already increased almost $10 million in his tenure at K-State.

"Tim has cultivated more and more opportunities to grow revenue," Cavello said. "We've really rained in expenses balancing both sides of the ledger. That's one side of it, you've got to grow your revenue, but you've also got to contain the costs. What Tim has brought is definite fiscal control. The new radio deal was finally knocked out; he signed several new sponsorship opportunities.

"There aren't any teams that are going without. Do they have enough to compete? I think our records speak to that. It's because of the people that we have here."

Bob Cavello
ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS FOR BUSINESS OPERATIONS

"Success in the programs has also been a tremendous help. That has really grown under Tim's leadership. They have done a fantastic job carrying the banner, and folks are buying in to the university and community as a whole."

Cavello said that he understands all departments in all universities are facing financial hurdles, but the K-State Department of Athletics does its part, by relying on itself and its people to help clear those hurdles and continue athletic and financial success.

"We're meeting the challenges," he said. "Any entity in higher education is fiscally challenged. Through a lot of hard work, the Department of Athletics is meeting it. We live within our means and still succeed.

"Our teams are nationally ranked and we finish each year in the black. It's about the people that believe in this place and the kids that go to school here."

TRACK | Track team to compete in Iowa Saturday

winning the high jump for the fourth time this season.

He cleared a height of 7 feet 2 inches on his way to taking the high jump title.

"I wasn't happy with with my jumping. I have a lot of work to do before the Big 12 Conference track and field meet," Lancaster said.

Lancaster also said he would be resting next weekend instead of traveling to the Iowa State Classic.

In other field events, junior Colby Cost had a solid performance in the weight throw.

Cost had a provisional toss of 65 feet, 8 inches which helped him earn a fifth-place finish.

Moving from the field events to the drama on the track, a number of Wildcats posted outstanding finishes on Saturday.

"A lot of the younger athletes are continuing to make progress. Hopefully, they will continue to improve through the rest of the season," Rovelto said.

Some of K-State's sprinters came close to making qualifying times, but missed the cut.

Christian Smith, 800-meter runner, missed the qualifying time by fractions of a second.

The NCAA qualifying time was 1:50.20.

Smith's time in the event was a heart-breaking 1:50.24.

Freshman LaToya Banks cruised to a personal best mark of 7.77 seconds in the 60 meter dash. She also narrowly missed the qualifying standard, but earned 10th place overall in the event.

The strongest event of the day came in the 600-yard run, where juniors Berenice Meza and Andrea Mendoza earned the rights to third and fourth place, respectively.

"We are coming down the final stretch of the season and we are only three weeks away from the conference championship. There is not a whole lot of conditioning to be done," Rovelto said. "The athletes are now starting to concentrate on their quality of work, but another point to be made is that they need to rest more."

Wildcat senior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle came in ninth in the 800-meter dash. Also on the 800-meter dash card was senior Shauna Burrell. She came in right behind Roman-Del Valle, registering a 10th-place finish.

The track and field team will return to action on Saturday, at the Iowa State Classic in Ames, Iowa.

DINERS | Manhattan may see more 24-hour diners

convenience that fast-food offers late at night, the issue of safety is at the top of her list, so when she's exhausted after a night of drinking, she relies on the delivery service of various establishments.

"You just don't think about sitting down," Willhite said of her food cravings late at night, "and driving's a big issue."

But Bob Iacobellis, owner of Bob's Diner, said his restaurant is equipped to handle the influx of bargoers with the late-night munchies.

Iacobellis said he couldn't deal with the high amount of business without his staff.

"It's nice to be the only ones open," he said, "but without the staff, we wouldn't be able to do it. You've got to give them the credit."

Iacobellis said many students patronize the diner as an end to an evening of drinking at the bars, and that the rowdiness of his patrons late at night doesn't bother him.

"You're in a college town. What happens when you're done? You go out," Iacobellis said. "We don't kick them out. They're here for a reason."

Iacobellis said if another 24-hour diner were to open in Manhattan, at least it would create a boom for the local economy.

"A benefit would be having more jobs available," he said.

Butler said that despite a lack of presence of other 24-hour eateries, this definitely is a possibility in the coming years.

"I think that as Manhattan continues to grow, we'll see more businesses expand their hours or others will come into the marketplace," Butler said.

Iacobellis said, however, that he wouldn't be worried about other diners taking business away from his own restaurant.

"We do what we can, but it wouldn't bother me either way," he said. "I'm OK with what we have. Let them show up."

Cats aim for 6 straight over Kansas

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With seven games remaining on its regular season schedule, the women's basketball team travels to Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence to take on the Jayhawks at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

The Wildcats (17-3, 8-1) are coming off a 79-53 beating of Colorado on Sunday and have won four straight and 15 of the last 16 contests.

Junior Kendra Wecker was one of four Wildcats to score in double figures in the game and led all scorers with 23 points.

The last time these two teams met, K-State beat Kansas 79-50 in Manhattan on Jan. 17.

The Wildcats got off to a great start in that game and dominated early while crusing to victory.

K-State made seven of their first eight shots and shot 66 percent from the field in the first half.

Senior Nicole Ohlde had a strong performance with 20 points and nine rebounds, while junior Megan Mahoney scored 15 points, dished out seven assists and grabbed seven rebounds.

The Jayhawks have lost five straight to K-State and are coming off 59-48 loss to Nebraska last Saturday.

KU junior guard Larisha Graves led Kansas with 17 points on 7-of-18 shooting and pulled down five rebounds in the loss.

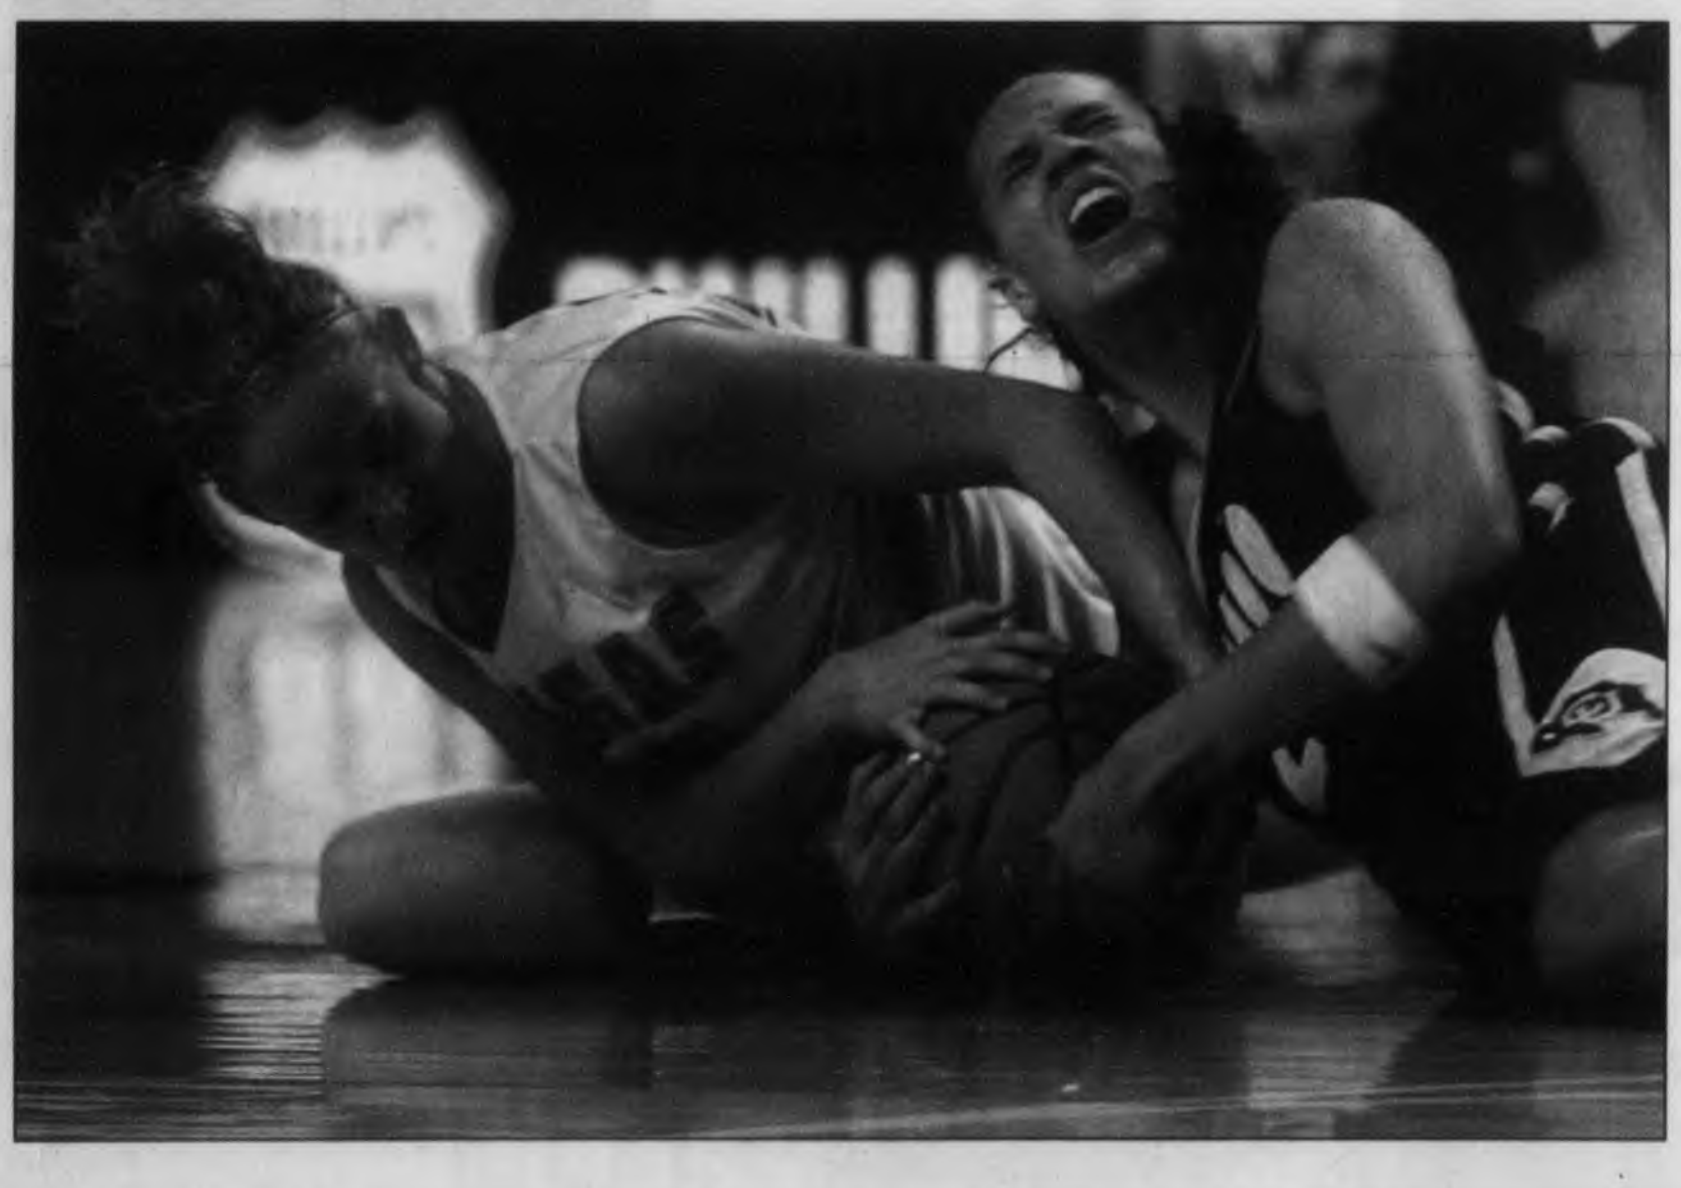
Kansas shot 32.4 percent in the first half and trailed by only three to the Huskers at the break, 24-27.

The Jayhawks then came out on an 11-0 run to take the largest lead of the game at 41-34, but could not hold off Nebraska.

The Huskers outscored the Hawks 25-7 to finish the game.

The loss dropped KU to 9-11 on the season and 2-7 in the Big 12.

The 2003-04 season has been rough for the Jayhawks.



Kansas coach Marian Washington took an indefinite leave of absence last week due to medical reasons.

Washington did not elaborate on the subject at her news conference but said that the problem had troubled her for some time.

KU assistant coach Lynette Woodard, a former standout player for the Jayhawks, is serving as the interim head coach.

Coach Deb Patterson said she expects to see a different Kansas team when they play them at Allen Fieldhouse.

"Like all Big 12 teams, I think you will see a much more aggressive team on their home court," Patterson said. "Obviously, because of the nature of the rivalry, KU will be extraordinarily motivated."

K-State women looking for revenge against Huskers

Nebraska shocked Cats earlier in season with 1st conference loss

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Nebraska Cornhuskers can expect K-State to be fired up for the 2 p.m. rematch Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Nebraska stunned the Wildcats in Lincoln on Jan. 24 when the Huskers dealt K-State the team's first conference loss of the season, 81-63.

NU's Margaret Richards scored 21 points in the victory, and Nebraska held K-State to a season-low 33.3 percent shooting.

The beating snapped K-State's 11-game winning streak and was the Wildcats first defeat since the team's 69-56 loss to Penn State on Nov. 29.

The 81-63 final was also the K-State's most lopsided defeat since falling 88-62 to Old Dominion in the 2002 NCAA tournament.

Kendra Wecker was the lone bright spot for K-State that day. The junior led the team with 21 points.

The Wildcats are hoping for a different result this time when Nebraska comes to K-State.

Bramlage Coliseum is building a reputation as one of the toughest places to play in the country.

After Sunday's 79-53 win over Colorado, the Wildcats extended their home winning streak to nine games and have won 29 consecutive regular season games on their home floor.

Last year, K-State went a perfect 19-0 at home during the regular season with only one home loss in the postseason to Notre Dame in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

Coach Deb Patterson said her team has made strides throughout the season.

"In my opinion we have grown in all phases of our game," Patterson said. "You should improve from your first conference road game to a game in February. I am real happy for our team and the improvements that they continue to make."

Nicole Ohlde, Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker continue to lead the Wildcats this year.

The dynamic foursome accounts for 72.3 percent of the team's scoring and 61.8 percent of the team's rebounding.

Ohlde leads K-State in points, with 330, and blocks, at 29. Wecker is the leader in rebounds, with 163, and steals, 37. Koehn is first in 3-pointers, with 64. Mahoney is the leader in assists with 93.

Nebraska is coming off a 59-48 win over Kansas on Saturday.

The Huskers' come-from-behind victory earned the team its highest overall and conference win totals since the 1999-2000 season.

The win snapped a three-game losing streak and helped NU improve to 15-6 overall and 5-5 in the Big 12.

Nebraska hosts Oklahoma State Wednesday night before traveling to Manhattan on Saturday, while the Wildcats to Lawrence Wednesday before the two teams meet in Bramlage.

K-State's Kendra Wecker tries to get up a shot against Nebraska during the Wildcats' loss to the Huskers in Lincoln. K-State will see Nebraska for the second time this season when they host the Huskers Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State men need win Wednesday

Iowa State game provides opportunity for Wildcats to redeem themselves

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no doubt when Iowa State comes to town to face the K-State men Wednesday – both teams need this one.

The Cyclones and Wildcats both enter the contest battered and bruised, as Iowa State has lost its previous two games by an average of 24 points, while K-State has won just three of its last.

As the conference season enters its final weeks, Coach Jim Wooldridge acknowledged the significance of the upcoming game.

"Both teams should have a sense of urgency," Wooldridge said.

After Saturday's heartbreaking one-point defeat at Colorado, Wednesday could provide an opportunity for the team to recover against an Iowa State team that has struggled on the road.

The Cyclones (13-6, 4-4) have lost their last five road games, including all three Big 12 games away from their home floor.

While the Cyclones have suffered severe road woes, K-State (10-9, 2-6) has played its best basketball in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats are 10-2 at home with their last home contest perhaps being their finest – a 78-61 win last Wednesday against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

However, if the Wildcats are to continue their strong home play, they will have to contain the much-acclaimed Cyclone backcourt.

In just his first season, Curtis Stinson leads the Cyclones in scoring, while fellow freshman Will Blalock paces the team in assists at more than four a game.

Sullivan is the Cyclones all-time leading 3-point shooter and hit seven threes in a Jan. 10 victory over Nebraska.

"They are dynamic," Wooldridge said of the Cyclone backcourt. "To hold them we'll have to do it as a team, it can't just be one guy."

Wooldridge will counter Iowa State's perimeter game with an experienced backcourt that has played well recently.

Senior guard Tim Ellis scored a career-high 25 points in Saturday's losing effort, while fellow senior Jarrett Hart has put up double-figures in K-State's last three home games.

Though Iowa State could create problems for the Wildcats Wednesday, perhaps the biggest obstacle standing in K-State's way its third conference victory is a mental one.

Overcoming Saturday's loss could be hard for the Wildcats, but it is a necessity senior guard Frank Richards said.

"It's mandatory," Richards said. "It's something we have to do no matter how much this hurts right now."

K-State's Jeremiah Massey drives around Nebraska's John Turek during the Wildcats' win over the Huskers at Bramlage Coliseum. Massey has been a crucial scoring force during the past two games, an effort that earned the junior Big 12 Rookie of the Week honors Monday.

Wildcats looking for 1st road win this season

Men's basketball to play Texas Tech on Saturday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's team will hit the road for the fourth consecutive Saturday, this to take on the No. 18 Texas Tech Red Raiders.

The Wildcats, who have not won a road game this season, will try overcome its road woes in the United Spirit Arena against one of the winningest coaches in NCAA history.

The Red Raiders' (17-5, 5-3) coach, Bobby Knight, is one of only six coaches in NCAA history to amass 800 or more wins, and senior guard Andre Emmett is averaging 21.6 points per game to lead the Big 12.

Texas Tech also has two underclassmen averaging double-digits in scoring and are among the league leaders in assists.

Junior guard Ronald Ross is averaging 10.6 points per game, with 3.5 assists per game while freshman guard, Jarrius Jackson is adding 11 points per game and 2.9 assists per game.

After jumping out to an impressive 4-0 conference start, the Red Raiders have cooled, going 1-3 in its last four conference games and dropping to fourth place in the Big 12 after losing to No. 20 Kansas 96-77 on Saturday.

"They just played extremely well on the offensive side, and they were better offensively than any team we have seen all season," Knight said after the loss.

K-State (10-9, 2-6) leads the all-time series, 10-6, but has lost three in a row in Lubbock, Texas. The Wildcats have not won on the road against the Red Raiders since 1986. "They've developed into such a great team, and we will have to play well to beat them on their floor," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

In their meeting last season, the Wildcats upset the No. 23 Red Raiders in front of a sell-out crowd at Bramlage Coliseum, 68-44. Although K-State has played better on the road recently, the Wildcats upped their conference road losing streak to 20 games in a heart-braking loss to Colorado on Saturday.

"We have taken some big steps in the last couple weeks," Wooldridge said. "Your record looks different if you win this, and so does your season."

Dutmer makes smart decisions on court

Junior forward helps fill holes caused by injured KSU players

By Andi Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even as a junior in high school, Amy Dutmer helped the K-State program.

"She hurt her knee," Kamie Ethridge, associate head coach, said, "that helped us out because we knew we liked her and other people weren't able to see her."

Since choosing K-State over the University of Nebraska four years ago, Dutmer has earned the nickname "Old Faithful."

"I can remember two years ago down in Texas, she hadn't played the whole game, and then we went into double over time and Coach (Deb) Patterson put her in," Ethridge said.

"She got two rebounds late in the game, and it wins the game at Texas in double overtime. She knows her strengths and weaknesses, and she's not going to try to do something she's not capable of.

"She's going to come in and help the team and she's not going to hurt the team. She gives you exactly what you need on the court."

In the past two years, the 6-foot forward has been the go-to player when injuries have plagued others.

"You name it, she does it," forward Kendra Wecker said. "She came in last year when Laurie (Koehn) was hurt, and now she's coming in as the starting role with Laurie, and I think she surprises a lot of people because they don't expect her to do the things she does."

As a junior, Dutmer started 14 games when Koehn was out with an ankle injury and as a senior has filled the starting role three times since guard Chelsea Domenico got hurt at Nebraska.

"My role is the same," Dutmer said. "Being able to come in and fill the role of someone that has been hurt or can't play at the moment, or when (Coach Patterson) needs someone to step up and fill a role that's not being filled.

"That's just something she's relied on my all four years that I've been here, and that's something that I'm proud to say that I've been able to do."

Off the court, Wecker said, Dutmer has a little bit of a wild side.

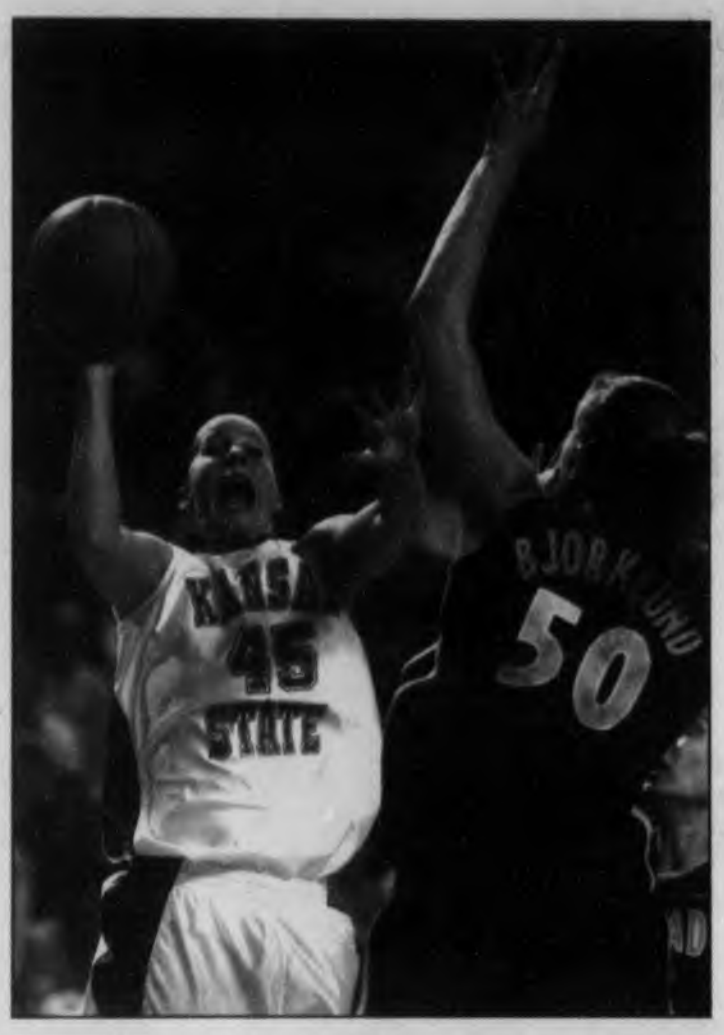
"It's not a bad wild side," Wecker said. "She's just kind of dare devilish she'll do anything if anybody tells her to do it. She'll do it without thinking about it.

"She's just a ton of fun to be around, and she's always smiling. She lights up a room whenever she walks in."

With what could be the final match up between the three seniors on the team and Nebraska, Wecker said it will probably mean a lot to Dutmer since she is a Nebraska native.

"To leave her home state and to play for Kansas State was probably a big decision for her," Wecker said. "I think she's going to want to come out and kind of get a last sweet revenge on them."

Ethridge said Dutmer will be hard to replace when the season ends.



"If you're not smart, you're going to say we can replace that, you're going to say that maybe we can replace her six points, but I don't know we can replace the things she does. She makes great decisions defensively. She's a seasoned veteran who's been through the struggles of losing and now winning.

"She just thinks the game better than anybody, and it's going to be very difficult to replace what she brings.

"On the court it's going to be hard to replace, but off the court it's going to be even harder to replace her because of what she gives and brings to the program," Ethridge said.

"...(Dutmer) makes great decisions defensively. She's a seasoned veteran who's been through the struggles of losing and now winning."

Kerry dominates Southern primary races

By Ron Fournier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – John Kerry vanquished his Dixie-bred rivals in Virginia and Tennessee on Tuesday, all but unstoppable in his march toward the Democratic nomination with a Southern sweep that extended his dominance to every region of the country.

"Americans are voting for change – East and West, North and now in the South," Kerry declared to the roar of supporters in Fairfax, Va., chanting, "Kerry! Kerry!"

John Edwards, Wesley Clark and Howard Dean clung quixotically to the hope that Kerry would stumble on his own or by scandal, but party leaders began pressing for the nomination fight to end.

Kerry was pocketing about half the vote in Virginia – with Edwards of North Carolina a poor second and Clark of Arkansas a far-distant third. Kerry crushed Edwards and Clark in Tennessee.

With two poor finishes, Clark considered dropping out. The key to his decision was the closely fought battle for second in Tennessee against Edwards, aides said.

Dean, the fallen front-runner, finished in single digits in Virginia and Tennessee, the latter the home state of political benefactor Al Gore. Dean had already retreated with his staggering campaign to Wisconsin, site of a Feb. 17 primary.

Soldier remembers little of Iraq explosion

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sgt. First Class Joseph Mosner doesn't recall the bomb that injured him.

"I don't remember the blast itself," Mosner said.

He had been stationed in Iraq for less than four months when he was injured. He and members of his unit had just arrived to relieve soldiers from their watch duty.

Their tank was parked at the back of the cinderblock house where the watch was set up.

The bomb was inside the wall of the house.

After the blast, Mosner's gunner regained consciousness and saw Mosner crawling on his hands and knees toward the house to check on the soldiers inside. The gunner told him to stop. Mosner was badly hurt, but couldn't tell.

"I didn't know the extent of my injuries at that time," Mosner said, "because I didn't feel any pain."

The blast took off the left side of Mosner's face, his left ear and part of his scalp down to the skull.

He broke both of his legs, punctured a hole in his left bicep down to the bone, and caused shrapnel wounds in his chest, arms and legs from the knees down.

Mosner was airlifted from Baghdad to Germany to Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, D.C. At Walter Reed, Mosner was put into a drug-induced coma for stabilization, and doesn't remember the days between Dec. 16 and Dec. 22.

Mosner is now back in Fort Riley recovering and awaiting a trip back to Walter Reed for plastic surgery. Mosner's doctors estimate he will need 6 months to one year of surgery.

Although Mosner's wounds sent him back to the United States, not every injury qualifies a soldier's return home.

"That has to be something pretty severe," said Sam Robinson, assistant media relations officer at Fort Riley.

Robinson said those

White House releases Bush's military records; Spokesman says duties fulfilled

Administration attempts to silence doubters that claim Bush went AWOL during Vietnam War

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The White House, trying to end doubts about President Bush's Vietnam-era military service, released documents Tuesday that it said proved he had "met his requirements" in the Texas Air National Guard.

"These documents outline the days on which he was paid. That means he served," Bush spokesman Scott McClellan said. However, there were still gaps in the record.

"The handful of documents released today by the White House creates more questions than answers," Democratic National Committee Chairman Terry McAuliffe said.

McAuliffe had helped reignite the story earlier this month when he charged Bush had gone "AWOL." With Vietnam War veteran John Kerry emerging as the Democratic presidential front-runner, Democrats have been trying to stoke long-standing questions about Bush's service in the Guard during the war.

Bush joined in 1968, and spent most of his service time based near Houston. But in May 1972 he requested and received a temporary assignment with the Alabama National Guard so he could serve as political director on the Senate campaign of Winton "Red" Blount,

Princeton students find fame in satirical rap

PRINCETON, N.J. – For the final project of a Princeton University English class, many students chose to write a 10-page paper, while others got more creative.

Nate Domingue and Bob Moore decided to create a satirical rap, "Generic Rap Song," that has become an Internet and radio hit.

"Generic Rap Song," written by under the alias of "P-Unit," pokes fun at many mainstream rappers and their styles.

After completing the project, Domingue and Moore posted the song and video on their Web site, www.princeton.edu/~rmoore/punit, and sent the link to 50 of their friends.

From the Web site, "Generic Rap Song" spread to humor sites like www.collegehumor.com and www.albinoblacksheep.com. A Top-40 radio station in Missouri, is playing the song and has requested an interview with P-Unit.

LOST APPLICATIONS

NEW YORK – As hard as it might be to get into Columbia University, it's a lot harder if your application never arrives.

Over the past few weeks, several applications mailed to Columbia's School of The Arts have been returned to prospective students, despite the fact the packets were stamped and addressed perfectly.

After examining the envelopes, it became clear the problem was occurring at the post office before the mail even reached Columbia, said Honey Fishman, Columbia's director of business services.

The envelopes were marked with a return-to-sender sticker, but Columbia Mail Services uses a different, sticker-free process to return mail.

PRANK CALLS

EVANSTON, Ill. – A prank - caller posing as a Searle Student Health Service employee at Northwestern University has called three women since April to falsely give them positive lab results for sexually transmitted diseases.

In each of the prank calls, a female voice told the three women on answering machines that they had tested positive for an STD. One woman was told she had AIDS.

FOULING OUT

LAWRENCE – The tradition of the "Wheaties" song isn't dead, yet.

For 33 years, the University of Kansas basketball band has played the "Wheaties" song when opposing players foul out.

An NCAA rule has put a stop to it, but band director Tom Stedham said there might be a way to keep the tradition alive.

The band can't play it anymore, but fans could still sing it; Stedham said.

Urkevich, Ankrom enter presidential race

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are no acronyms to remember. Just two simple letters: UA.

Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom officially filed to run for student body president and vice president on Monday, and have already begun campaigning by speaking to campus organizations.

The UA campaign – Urkevich/Ankrom – also holds another meaning.

"Our campaign is a Unified Action," Urkevich said. "It's a new approach to help students solve problems.

Urkevich and Ankrom said they hope to unify undergraduates, graduate students, faculty and administration to improve the university with little or no increases in student fees.

"We believe in the value of keeping our word," Urkevich, senior in finance, said. "We have realistic visions to make realistic changes."

The changes begin with a student-centered, online portal system unifying several student services.

Services like landlord ratings, online book exchanges, campus calendars and virtual marketplaces would highlight the site.

Ankrom, senior in management information systems and technology coordinator on the current administration's cabinet, said the idea is modeled after several other universities.

The site would be integrated with, but separate from, the K-State homepage. Instead, the site would be entirely student oriented, he said.

Next, the Targeted Diversity Initiative will bring all K-State multicultural organizations together for one large event.

Urkevich said the event would be comparable to All-University Open House, where there is a central focus to unify different departments.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Hayley Urkevich, senior in finance, and Erik Ankrom, senior in management, filed Monday to run for student body president and vice president, respectively. The pair spoke to the Salina Student Senate on Tuesday night.

Online teacher and course evaluations are an important part of the campaign, Ankrom said.

Students could log evaluations of teachers and courses into the online portal system for others to view.

"Students could then formulate their own opinions about which teachers would best fit their learning style," he said.

The University of Kansas has implemented a similar system, he said. The new evaluations would not replace current faculty-administered teacher evaluations, but the results would be more accessible to students.

Students' K-State eID would be required for parts of the online portal system, including the teacher and course evaluation section.

Finally, the wait-list system must remain a priority, Urkevich said.

"The current administration has made progress, but it's important the next administration remains committed to correcting the wait-list procedure," she said.

Tuition also will remain an issue, although Urkevich and Ankrom said they are limited on how much they can control the increases, but will seek student input on any tuition issues.

"We're not political people," Urkevich said. "We don't have personal agendas – we have the students' agendas."

Conner, Sandall file as presidential pair

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brandishing the slogan, "Real students. Real issues. Real answers. Get real," Vicki Conner, senior in biology and political science, and Jeremy Sandall, senior in industrial engineering, announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president on Tuesday.

"Our goal is to reach as many students as possible," Conner said.

The pair has four goals to "get real."

The first platform, academic quality, has two points. The first is to develop an online database for course syllabi and teacher evaluations. The pair also wants to increase the use of the K-State Online gradebook.

The pair will work with Faculty Senate and the Information Technology Assistance Center to help professors become more familiar with online grading.

Technological advancement is the second platform for Conner and Sandall, and they will work with iTAC to create student-centered portals.

"This will be a way to collaborate all services into one login and Web page and students will be able to customize it with online sources like MTV or ESPN," Sandall said.

Conner said the portals will add to the eID capabilities.

"The portal is a really complicated issue," she said. "Plus it's expensive, and we want to ensure the funding is there."

The pair will create a student panel to help determine content and format.

They said this can be accomplished by January 2005.

Conner said the University of Kansas already has a portal system, but said when K-State's portals are complete they will be better and more equipped than KU's.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Vicki Conner, senior in biology and political science, announces her bid for student body president with her running mate Jeremy Sandall, senior in industrial engineering, Tuesday afternoon in the front of Hale Library.

The third platform is campus service.

They will create The K-State Exchange, for students to buy and sell diverse goods throughout the K-State community.

"We know students are spending an extreme amount of money, and this would be one way to allow students to get the supplies they need," Conner said.

The final platform is student connection. Canvas the Campus is an effort to find individuals to fill their cabinet.

"We know there a lot of strong, experienced leaders at K-State, who, for one reason or another, have not gotten involved with student government," Conner said. "We'd like to engage those students to help us serve the student body."

Conner and Sandall have a feature on their Web site, www.k-state.edu/getreal, which allows students to voice their concerns.

The pair will conduct monthly forums for students.

The first forum is scheduled for March 1 in the K-State Student Union.

Steps can be taken to avoid computer viruses

By Abbie Whited
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Viruses are going around, but students seem to be immune.

There is an epidemic, however, among computers.

Sterling Hanenkamp, system administration manager in Computing and Information Sciences, said viruses are often called worms, or a virus that attacks through the Internet.

He said most worms are passed through e-mail, but some sneak in through security problems in Web servers.

A worm will scan a person's address book and forward emails to random people in the address book, he said.

Tim Ramsey, information technology security coordinator, said worms do this to hide their tracks.

To get the virus, Ramsey said people generally have to open an infected attachment sent via e-mail. However, some viruses, like the Welchia virus, take advantage of flaws on the computer system.

"You don't even have to be sitting at your computer," he said. "Just having it on and connected to the Internet is enough."

Several steps can be taken to prevent viruses.

Hanenkamp said he advises e-mail users to never run programs received in email or to open files that are unfamiliar.

"Be skeptical about attachments people send through e-mail," he said.

He also said to stay updated with current antivirus software.

However, Ramsey said further steps should also be taken.

"It's not enough to trust the antivirus software and run an antivirus scan on an attachment, because viruses are coming out so quickly and so fast that the virus signatures aren't keeping up," he said. "If you get an e-mail that looks odd and it has an attachment, reply and ask if they meant to send it. If not, then they know nothing about it, and it is most certainly a virus."

Ramsey said recent viruses can be problematic, not only because they annoy users by sending out several hundred e-mails, but they also leave behind a surprise, like a back door, or a type of control, to the computer, he said.

"That's a big problem because if I wanted to mess with you, I could command this remote door program to erase your homework or read your e-mail."

TO THE POINT

Election issues should focus more on critical national debates

George W. Bush's military record. John Kerry's Botox shots. Howard Dean's embarrassing "Yeeeaaah."

Where are the real election issues?

As the democratic race gets heated, the presidential election filth begins to pile up.

The billion-dollar deficit, war in Iraq and weak economy seem to be only side issues. But these are the exact discussions that should be at the forefront of the election of the most powerful man in the world.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The news media is partly to blame. The CNN general manager, Princell Hair, even apologized for overplaying the Dean scream.

But the viewers are equally to blame. Voters need to distinguish between the media hype and defining election issues.

Will Bush repeat the same mistakes he made in his first term if elected again? Could John Kerry do a better job? Who, based on experience, intelligence and leadership skills, is going to lead America with fairness and responsibility for the next four years?

These are the questions we need to be asking ourselves.

While presidential candidates' personal lives always will be a topic of curiosity, they should no longer be the central debate.

THURSDAY'S OPINIONS

Don't talk back

Student-teaching experience teaches humility, restraint

Runny noses. Frequent trips to the bathroom. Whining. Fussing.

No, it's not a nursing home. It's Blue Valley Northwest High School in Overland Park, Kan.

PAUL RESTIVO

Since Jan. 5, I have been student-teaching the future leaders of this world in the areas of English and journalism. Aside from having to wear suit pants and sweaters all the time, I have enjoyed it.

But not without some gnawed-off fingernails and clenched fists.

Just two months ago I could choose whether I wanted to go to class. Or if I wanted to wear flip-flops in the freezing rain. Or if I wanted to cuss someone out for making me angry.

Just two months ago I was the president of a K-State fraternity and the editor of one of the most prominent daily newspapers in the country.

Now, I'm nothing.

A journalism adviser once told me I should take a bite out of the humble pie. I think I've had the whole pie.

A piece of my life in second hour:

"Mr. Restivo? Is that like Stevo from 'Jackass?'"

"Uhh, no, Jeff. My name is Restivo."

"That's a dumb name."

"John, please don't say dumb."

"Yeah, John. Say retard."

"According to my special needs chart, no one in here is a retard."

"So, you're like a student-teacher or something. How old are you?"

"Dude, he's like 25 or something."

"You dumbst. He's 19."

"Uh, excuse me. Can we not use foul language in the classroom please? Seth, can you please not sit in the teacher's chair?"

"Don't listen to him Seth. He's not a real teacher."

"Yeah? Well you're not going to be a real student if you don't stop being a subordinate."

"I dare you to do something to me."

(a silent Hail Mary to myself for self control)

"OK, let's get back to the book, shall we? Now, how is everyone enjoying Truman Capote's 'In Cold Blood?'"

"This book sucks. If it doesn't get better in the next 20 pages, I'm quitting it."

"I never said you had to read it. You just need to write a paper and take the test over it. So how about Capote's writing style, hmm?"

"Capote's gay. I don't read books by gay people."

"OK. I will have none of that in this classroom. If you're going to discriminate, do it outside of the room."

"So, I can do it in the hall?"

"Uh, I –"

"Where'd you get that shirt?"

"Do you like Lizzie McGuire?"

"Please, please, guys. Can we focus on the book here? Now, if you'll notice on page four, you'll see that – Seth, please don't throw coke bottles across the room. Kelly sit down!"

"Listen to him yell. He sounds like my dad."

"Killer kicks, man. And where do you buy your cords?"

"I need to die."

"What did you say, Stevo?"

"I think he said he wants –"

"Close your books. Get out a pencil and write. The next person to talk loses participation points for the day."

"Can we sing?"

"Enough!"

"Can I get a drink?"

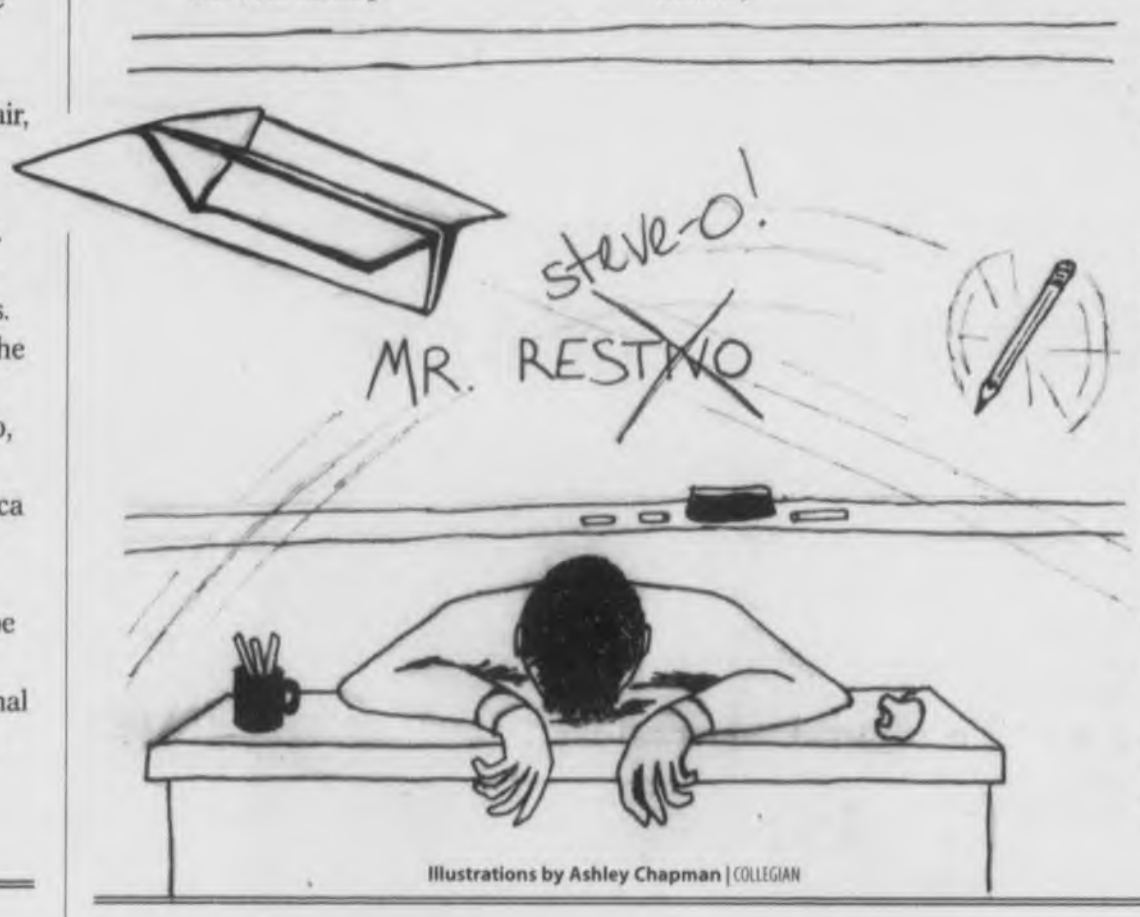
"Just go!"

(knock at the door – principal enters)

"Mr. Restivo. What's this about discrimination being allowed in the hallways?"

And so it goes, day in and day out. Up by 5:30 a.m. At work by 7 a.m. Home by 5:30 p.m. To bed by 9:30 p.m.

Why am I doing this? I'm still figuring it out.



There's no sexual innuendo allowed at any time. Cussing is forbidden around students. Jeans are looked down upon. Dressing too hip can be a sign of "trying to be one of them."

But for once, I have more than 100 students by the throat.

I make the assignments. I make the tests.

Best of all, I give the grade.

Bush has exploited 9/11 victims for war on terror

MICKAYLA FINK

In the United States, politicians and the lies they tell sometimes become indistinguishable.

"I did not have sexual relations with that woman, Ms. Lewinsky" or "I invented the Internet" became the epithetic slogans of conservatives used to impeach Clinton, and discredit Gore's campaign.

These are lies, and funny ones at that.

Many Americans couldn't have cared less if Bill Clinton cheated on his wife – some would say it's one of the perks of being president, but the conservatives had a hissy-fit over this lie.

The fudging of the truth was the straw that broke the donkey's back – Clinton had to be impeached.

Don't think I'm bitter about Clinton's impeachment – he wasn't convicted by the Senate and didn't lose his office, so who cares anymore, right?

The ludicrous fact that Clinton was impeached for fellatio doesn't bother me anymore. What bothers me is lying about oral sex somehow constitutes a high crime, while lying about Iraq posing an "imminent threat" to the security of our nation, and thus leading us into an unfounded war, doesn't even warrant a censure of W.

Our highly esteemed head dimwit W lied to the nation and to the world (or at the very least, extremely exaggerated to the point of deception), and in doing so, has cost this country the lives of 529 soldiers at last count, not to mention thousands of Iraqis and billions of tax-payer dollars.

Too many lives lost, and for what?

Is the nation any safer?

Probably not.

If anything, the Iraq situation has made us less secure.

With so many National Guard troops deployed, who will come to our aid if there is a disaster within our borders?

Iraq and the morphing of Osama bin Laden into Saddam Hussein have detracted our attentions from Afghanistan, where we actually were fighting al-Qaeda.

I realize Bush isn't big into learnin', but doesn't he realize it's never a good idea to fight a two-front war?

Granted our guns are bigger, and our bombs are more destructive, but we still haven't been able to find bin Laden, so obviously, slick weapons aren't helping.

This administration has an amazing ability to change the subject, transmuting one problem into another, or even ignoring some issues altogether.

With the revelation of faulty intelligence, the Bush 2.0 administration is trying to back pedal, emphasizing how much better the world is without Saddam Hussein.

But Saddam wasn't the problem we were supposed to be dealing with – al-Qaeda was.

Intelligence sources repeatedly denied any connection between Saddam's regime and al-Qaeda, yet the Bush administration has continuously made a false link between the two.

The truth is Bush wanted this war.

He wanted it so much that it was a topic of his administration eight months prior to the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Recently, former Secretary of the Treasury Paul O'Neill revealed that removal of Saddam was on Bush's agenda a mere 10 days after his inauguration.

What irritates me most about this situation is that Bush has exploited the victims of Sept. 11 in order to gain support for his ill-founded war.

Essentially, this administration has used the mass-murder of thousands of people as propaganda both to support this war and to silence dissenters by labeling us anti-American.

No one is able to accurately speculate as to the future of Iraq – for better or worse is up in the air at this point.

What I do know for sure is the lives that have been lost will always be gone.

If the Bush administration hadn't been so hasty, some of these folks might still be with us.

Hindsight is 20-20.

The sooner Bush is in our hindsight, the sooner we can examine the damage his administration has caused.

PERSPECTIVES

Gays already have equal marriage rights

By Keith Parsons
THE COLLEGIATE TIMES (VIRGINIA TECH)

BLACKSBURG, Va. – I get a stabbing pain in my head every time I see a statement talking about the rights of individuals to equality in the eyes of the government. In the editorial "The state must recognize equality for homosexual marriages" (CT, Feb. 6), statements of that sort were used to defend the idea of homosexual marriage.

Despite the verbal and moral slight of hand this statement tries to pull, the truth is homosexuals are, and always have been completely equal in the eyes of the law regarding marriage.

The reason people may become confused about a person's rights regarding marriage stems from a deep-seated misconception about what marriage actually is. At heart, marriage is a legal business procedure. You fulfill several prerequisites, and then you get a marriage certificate allowing you to receive whatever benefits your employer or the government offers.

In Virginia, if you want to become married, you have to find somebody of the opposite sex who, along with yourself, is over 16 (if under 18 you require parental consent) and get his or her consent.

You and your intended spouse have to apply in person with a form of picture identification and a birth certificate before a clerk of the court and receive a license – provided neither of you are married to another person at the time.

Afterwards, you go to a justice of the peace, pay them up to $30, and they will perform a ceremony, submit the last papers and then you are considered married.

Notice one thing missing: love. That's right, the law doesn't give a hoot whether you love each other. All it cares about is consent, and the technical notes mentioned above.

As long as you fulfill these technical requirements, you can get married.

Furthermore, these laws are completely equitable. Any man, gay or straight, who wants to be married according to the laws of the commonwealth of Virginia must find a consenting female, gay or straight, who isn't married.

The law doesn't care about your sexual preference. All it cares about is whether you meet the requirements it has set forth.

Consider four people: a gay man, a straight man, a woman and a third man.

According to the Virginia law, both the gay man and the straight man have the right to marry the woman. Neither the gay man nor the straight man has the right to marry the man. It sounds pretty equal to me.

Before marriage, the treatment is obviously equal, but what about afterward? It's easy to see at this point both gay and straight people are still equal under the law. A company will not deny health benefits to the legally wedded wife of a gay man any more than it would the wife of a straight man.

Similarly, they wouldn't deny any rights to the husband of a lesbian woman that they would not also deny to the husband of a non-lesbian woman. This is complete legal equality.

All the law can do is see to it all people are treated equally according to the requirements and benefits strictly set forward by the law. This the law does.

Now, it is not to say gays should not be able to marry. I am merely pointing out there is no legal inequity giving them a right to marry via comparison with straight people.

The real question is simple and direct: will society benefit from the allowance of gay marriages? To continue to grouse about a purported non-existent inequality is horribly detrimental to levelheaded thinking about this issue.

Banning gay marriage limits individual rights

The California Aggie
(U. California-Davis)
EDITORIAL

DAVIS, Calif. – Those opposed to gay marriage claim that defining the institution as a union between a man and a woman is necessary to preserve its sanctity. But if heterosexuals like Britney Spears can get married and have it annulled 55 hours later, it is clear the value of marriage is in jeopardy for reasons other than gay marriage.

When the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that preventing gay marriage in the state was unconstitutional, the court set a precedent to allow gay couples the same rights and privileges as the opposite-sex marriages.

The greater issue, however, is not whether gay marriage is legal. Similar to the Civil Rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s, the real issue is whether individual rights are being violated by applying different laws to different groups of people.

Nevertheless, when the federal government defined marriage as the union between one man and one woman in the 1996 Defense of Marriage Act, it took an official stance against gay marriages. Thirty-eight states now have laws banning gay marriage, and an amendment to the U.S. Constitution is being proposed.

It's hard to imagine how giving gay couples the right to marry would infringe on others rights or cause any harm. Government officials who spend so much time wrangling over the matter should focus their efforts on more pressing national issues, such as ending the war on terror or revitalizing the economy.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Young Democrats deserve equal treatment

Editor,

The K-State Young Democrats, which is not affiliated with the national Democratic Party, is a campus organization with the same rights as any other group on campus.

One of these rights is the right to receive funding for activities from Student Senate, out of the $550 in activity fees that every student pays. These funds are to be distributed to all groups evenly and without bias. According to the university attorney's office, there are no rules to prohibit them from receiving funds.

Nothing, that is, except personal bias, which unfortunately seems to play a significant part in the decision-making policies of the Allocations Committee.

The Young Democrats requested funding to attend a national committee meeting and were denied. They were the only organization denied funding this year, although other politically-motivated groups requested money for marches and meetings.

At this national committee meeting, members attended lectures on women's rights issues in Mexico, campaign management and how to increase voter participation. These are far less political and controversial than the $2,000 request made by the Students for the Right to Life to attend an pro-life march, which was passed almost unanimously.

As no rule exists keeping either group from receiving funding, personal feelings must have come into play. This is contrary to democracy and hurts the credibility of Student Governing Association. When the Young Democrats' appeal of this decision comes before Student Senate on Thursday, I sincerely hope senators will vote based on the laws as they stand, and not based on personal feelings.

The art of POOL

Photos by Zach Long | COLLEGIAN

Patrick Bates laughs after Nichole Holley tried to preform a behind-the-back shot during a game of pool Monday night at Fast Eddy's Billiards Room in Aggieville. The popularity of the sport has increased lately with national television coverage of professional billiards becoming more common.

Pool's appeal not limited by age, experience or skill level

By Marshall Ice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Who is the best pool player in Manhattan?

The answer depends on who you ask.

"There are a handful of good players," Cliff Conner, manager at Fast Eddy's Billiards' Room, said. "L.V. Abernathy, Matt Strauss, Larry Quinn, Greg Gilman: Those guys travel different tournaments in Kansas and Oklahoma, and they all place near the top. Oklahoma seems to draw a good amount of professional players."

Just the presence of a skilled player can draw a crowd.

"If one good player comes in, other players want to play the top guy or win money," Conner said.

However, Fast Eddy's sees players of all different skill levels.

"We get college kids and military people who float in," Conner said.

"You only have to be 18 with an ID. The majority of our players, maybe 85 to 90 percent, are recreational players just out to have a good time.

"The other 10 percent are in here to play seriously. They want to play pool, win money and get better. They do not care about the alcohol or the women or anything else. They are just here to shoot pool."

"Anyone can play pool. There are old people, young people. It is a very diverse sport."

Brian Russell
JUNIOR IN GOLF COURSE MANAGEMENT

Players used to pack the establishment for weekly tournaments.

"In the late '80s and into the '90s, there was a lot going on," Conner said.

"We have been discussing bringing back tournaments Sundays, Mondays or Tuesdays or some variation of those days. People still will have their own little tournaments."

The atmosphere is a big part of Fast Eddy's draw.

"We try to take good care of our tables," Conner said. "It is not dark and dingy or run down. We try to keep it well lit. We do not describe ourselves as a pool hall because people have a bad image of that. We consider ourselves a billiard room.

"We tend to be strict, but that keeps the place nice and keeps us from having a lot of problems."

Although Fast Eddy's might bring tournaments back, that doesn't mean only experienced players are welcome.

"Anyone can play pool," Brian Russell, junior in golf course management, said. "There are old people, young people. It is a very diverse sport."

Conner agreed.

"Our owner, John Gilman, is in his 70s, and he still shoots a good game," Conner said.

Pool for dummies

8-Ball

Introduction

Eight-Ball is played with a cue ball and 15 other balls numbered one through 15.

One through seven are known as the "solids" because they are a solid color, the striped balls are numbered nine through 15. The eight ball is solid black.

Object of the game

The balls are placed in a triangular formation at the foot of the table. The 8-ball is placed in the middle of the pool ball pyramid. The cue ball is hit from across the table into the formation. This is known as the break.

In call-shot pool, players must make it apparent which hole they are going to attempt to hit a ball into.

Once you have hit all of the balls (solids or stripes) in the holes, then you must attempt to hit the eight ball in one of the holes. The first player to hit all the balls in and the eight ball, wins.

Legal and illegal shots

The object of the game isn't rocket science, but there also are several other key rules to the game. If the cue ball is scratched — when a player hits the cue ball in a hole — or a ball goes in a hole that was not called, a foul has been committed. As a penalty for these fouls, the opposing player receives the cue ball in hand and must shoot from behind the head strings.

Also, if a player scratches on the eight ball at the end of the game, he loses.

Special situations

If a player knocks the eight ball in on the break, he automatically wins. This is probably the hardest way to win, because the chances are extremely slim.

Fast facts

The game of pool

- Pool is one of the safest sports in the world, unless you happen to poke your opponents in the eye with the cue stick.
- There were few, if any, women pool players in the early 1900s, until Frances Anderson entered the scene. Anderson ran tables and hustled players for $5,000 in some games, and went undefeated for more than 25 years. One day Anderson came forward and scheduled a widely publicized announcement that shocked the world. Anderson was from Kansas, and his birth name was Orie. Frances Anderson was actually Orie Anderson, a man.

Billiards games offer needed stress reliever, friendly competition

Table rates up to $3.50 per hour, waiting lines common among late-night crowds

By Levi Wolters
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nothing can bring two friends closer than a game of 8-Ball and a couple of Black & Mild cigars.

Such is the case for Dan Finke, freshman in business, and Brett Lafferty, freshman in open-option, who decided to skip their Monday afternoon classes for an hour of pool and cigars at Fast Eddy's billiards Room in Aggeville.

"We didn't feel like going to class," Finke said. "But felt like we needed to do something with our lives this afternoon, so we decided to hit up the pool tables."

With a total of 26 tables, Fast Eddy's was the logical choice for Finke and Lafferty.

"It's a great place," Lafferty said. "Since we aren't old enough to drink, it wouldn't make much sense to head to a bar and wait for a table to open up. Here we can smoke our cigars and play pool all afternoon.

With Finke and Lafferty the only patrons at the early afternoon hour, daytime bartender, Crystal Kelley, passed the time by posting the night's beer specials.

"Today has been really boring for me," Kelley said. "I usually have nine to 10 tables full by now, but today has been really slow.

As about half of the regular customers are military personnel from Fort Riley, Kelley explained that K-State students have become the majority of patrons due to the amount of troops still in Iraq.

Fast Eddy's has become a haven for students like Finke and Lafferty who want to get away for a couple of quick pick-up games, but also for fraternities, sororities and other groups of friends who are in search of competitive tournaments, which are offered during the daytime for any group.

"Pool is one of the few games in which it doesn't matter if you're the little kid or the fat kid," Finke said.

"It doesn't take much physical talent. It can be both competitive and fun at the same time."

Affordability is also a key draw for the students and military personnel alike. Rates range from $2.50 an hour per person from noon to 6 p.m., to $3.50 an hour from 6 p.m. to close.

Other special rates include free pool for women on Wednesday, half-priced Sundays, as well as an all-day table for $4.50 on Monday through Fridays, capped off with numerous beer specials throughout the week.

Kelley said the busiest business hours are between 10 p.m. and midnight, but tables begin filling at 9 p.m. when military personal start coming in from Fort Riley. Ten- to 15-minute waiting lists are not unusual at these hours.

While Finke and Lafferty debated the rules of cutthroat and the choice of Tom Petty on the Internet juke box, Kelley looked forward to busier days.

"I'm anxious for the military's return from Iraq," said Kelley. "They'll have money, and it will start getting crazy around here again."

Brad Taylor tries to cut the two ball into the corner pocket during a game of 9-ball. The sport can offer a night of entertainment for players of all skill levels.

Brad Taylor sends the cue ball forward at the start of a game of 9-ball. The game offers more of a challenge and is featured as part of several high-profile professional billiards competitions.

Pool for dummies
9-ball

Introduction

In this version, only the balls numbered one through nine are played. On each shot, the cue ball must contact the lowest numbered ball on the table. If a player pockets a ball without any fouls or penalty, then he continues shooting. Balls one through nine are racked in a diamond formation, and are broken in the same way as 8-Ball pool.

Object of the game

The opponents try the hit all the balls in the numerical order. The player to hit the nine ball in is declared the champion.

If a foul is committed or a player does not pocket any balls, the play then goes to his opponent.

Legal and illegal shots

Similar to 8-Ball, if a scratch is made on an attempted shot, the other player gets the cue ball in hand and has a free shot.

Also, the one ball must be struck on the opening break.

■ There are also a number of other games that pool lovers can play, including 14.1 continuous, one pocket, and wheelchair competition.

History of
The game of pool

■ The history of pool is long and rich. Kings, peasants, presidents, hustlers and mental patients all have played the game.

■ Pool had its primitive beginning in the 15th century, when it started as a game similar to croquet. It was played outside on shortly cut grass with common sticks and balls.

■ As the game evolved, it was moved into the warmer confines of the great indoors. A pool "table" made of wood was developed. The table was topped with a piece of green cloth to simulate playing outside.

■ The first games of billiards were played with four balls and a cue ball. Probably the oldest game in billiards is one-ball. The first years of one-ball date back to the 1700s. A complete rule book for a British form appeared in 1775.

■ Many years later, 8-ball became the most popular American form of pool. This game is fairly new and was develop in the early 1900s. 8-Ball's brother, 9-ball, appeared during the 1920s.

Chickens with the bird flu virus walk near a grave of burning chickens Friday in Bali Indonesia. In a traditional Hindu cremation ceremony normally reserved for humans, a village in Bali burned 2,500 chickens in attempt to send off the evil spirits that they say brought on the bird flu outbreak.

China bans U.S. poultry imports

U.S. officials reveal discovery of bird flu virus in chickens

By Stephanie Hoo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING – China banned U.S. poultry imports Tuesday after U.S. officials reported bird flu in a flock of chickens in Delaware. Japan, Malaysia, Singapore and South Korea took similar steps.

China said any American fowl that have already arrived at its ports would be returned or destroyed.

Hours later, U.S. officials reported avian flu on a second farm in central Delaware. The state canceled all sales of live poultry.

The U.S. strain is different from that affecting Asia – it does not affect humans.

Exports account for about 20 percent of the U.S. poultry industry. China imports only a fraction of its poultry products – 709,000 tons last year – but most of that came from the United States.

China produced more than 9.9 million tons of chicken meat alone last year – 20 percent of total worldwide production. On Tuesday, China confirmed a suspected case in its remote northeastern region of Xinjiang, which is more than 1,200 miles from the site of its first confirmed case in the far south.

China has slaughtered and inoculated millions of fowl to try to contain the disease. The more dangerous form of bird flu is confirmed or suspected in 14 of the nation's 31 regions.

Concerned the virus could spread to endangered birds, the government said Tuesday it also has resettled as many as 250 rare ibis atop a remote mountain.

No human cases have been reported in the country, although at least 19 people have died from the disease in Thailand and Vietnam in recent weeks.

China has banned poultry imports from those countries as well as other flu-hit areas in Asia. In December, China banned beef products from the United States after a case of mad cow disease was reported there. That prohibition has not been rescinded.

Henry Niman, a Harvard University Medical School instructor, said Tuesday he was skeptical of the notion that there were no human cases in a nation of 1.3 billion people with so many poultry infections.

"The idea that there are no human cases in China just doesn't really ring true," said Niman, who moderates a widely read e-mail list about SARS and launched its bird-flu equivalent this week.

"It seems that they've got the virus pretty widespread and it's been around for some time," he said. "That leads me to believe that there's more going on in China that the outside world knows about."

The WHO's representative in Beijing also has voiced concern that China may already have human cases of bird flu.

Commissioners consider reverting 12th Street back to two-way traffic

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners met Tuesday night for a planning session to review the decision they made in summer of 2003 to make 12th Street one-way between Bluemont Avenue and Moro Street.

The intersection was deemed a high-risk intersection by the city, and the one-way proposal was chosen from several methods of decreasing the accident rate of the intersection.

City Engineer Jeff Hancock said the city distributed 115 surveys to Aggieville businesses, questioning them regarding the issue of how they felt about traffic flow in the shopping district.

The survey focused specifically on the one-way streets – Moro Avenue, and Laramie and 12th streets.

Hancock said the business owners who took the time to complete the survey, about 22 percent of the surveys distributed, were divided on whether Moro and Laramie should remain one-way streets, but generally supported reverting 12th Street to its previous configuration, which allowed two-way traffic.

"Overwhelmingly, their response was to turn it back into a two-way street," Hancock said.

He said it was important to realize that due to the low response rate on the survey, the survey results could be inaccurate.

"The data may be somewhat skewed due to the low response rate," Hancock said.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said while many business owners have expressed distaste for the setup, the Aggieville Business Association did not have an official position on the matter.

"If you do one thing, it causes one problem. If you do the other, it causes problems somewhere else. The reason we started this brain damage is to reduce the accidents, and that part has worked."

Mark Hatesohl
CITY COMMISSIONER

Coco Bolo's owner Bud Cox said Aggieville was a showplace for Manhattan, and the current traffic situation makes it hard for people who are not familiar with the setup to navigate.

"It poses a real threat to the people from the outside," he said.

Cox said in addition to making it nearly impossible for his customers to reach his restaurant without making an illegal turn, 12th Street being one-way hinders the movement of traffic for the entire district.

"It just puts a whole plug on getting in and out of Aggieville," he said.

Hancock said he did not feel he could make a recommendation to the commission due to the complicated nature of the situation.

"If you're desire is to fix the accident rate, then I recommend we leave it the way it is," he said.

"If you're desire is to accommodate the Aggieville Business Association, then we need to change it back to two-way."

Commissioners expressed concern that while a two-way street may increase convenience, it could not be done safely without prohibiting left turns from northbound 12th Street onto Bluemont Avenue.

Mayor Mark Taussig said while the accidents at the intersection of 12th Street and Bluemont Avenue have decreased, the increased traffic at the other intersections in Aggieville have caused other accidents.

Also, he said, the hassle of the change outweighs any decrease in accidents.

"We need to be concerned with the businesses," Taussig said.

Commissioner Mark Hatesohl said the issue is complicated because there are negatives and positives to both situations.

"If you do one thing it causes one problem," he said. "If you do the other it causes problems somewhere else."

Hatesohl said he felt the current situation should be retained for at least another six months for further evaluation.

"The reason we started this brain damage is to reduce the accidents and that part has worked," he said.

Commissioner Brad Everett said he felt the concerns of the Aggieville Business Association should be paramount.

"We need to resolve this and provide direction instead of sitting on our hands," Everett said.

"We need to go back to the way it was, it does not work and we need to make a change."

2 architecture programs received national recognition

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State architecture has once again received national attention.

Design Intelligence magazine recently released its rankings of the best interior architecture and design and architecture programs in the nation.

K-State placed third and eighth, respectively.

K-State has been ranked among the top 15 programs in the nation since the survey began five years ago.

The survey asks firms to indicate which accredited programs in interior architecture, design and architecture have produced, in the past five years, graduates most prepared for practice.

Principals of more than 1,000 firms across the nation receive the survey.

"It's a nice distinction to have, obviously, because students want to go to the best program," said Steve Murphy, head of the Department of Interior Architecture and Product Design.

"By having this out there, if you're one of the firms not contacted, you say 'Gee, I'd better look at some of these other schools.'"

Murphy said there are reasons why the college is so highly regarded.

"You have to have good administrative leadership to stay involved," Murphy said.

Murphy said the faculty is also dedicated to teaching.

Palmer said faculty require a lot from their students but don't make it seem like hard work.

"They keep tabs on you during the school year," Palmer said.

"They do everything they can to keep you going through the program."

However, Murphy said recruiting outstanding students is the most important aspect of the program.

"We get students from all over the country trying to get in," Law said.

"Our students are typically from the Midwest and have good work ethic."

Male-female roommates form close friendships, cope with conflicts

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the late 1970s, John Ritter, Suzanne Somers and Joyce DeWitt starred in a television comedy that pushed the envelope by matching two attractive young women and a handsome young man and having the three live together under one roof.

Almost 25 years later, Crystal Cook, senior in finance; Ashley Peterson, junior in social work; and Ken Blachly, freshman in sociology, are starring in their own real-life version of "Three's Company."

At the end of last semester, Cook and Peterson, who have been close friends since high school, had to ask their previous roommate to move out, leaving the women with an open room in their townhouse.

The two claim they were lucky to bump into Blachly, whom the girls worked with at a restaurant in high school, during a trip home to Kansas City.

After some discussion, all three decided to give moving in together a shot.

"We all lost touch after we graduated high school," Blachly said.

"I had just gotten back from some military duties in Germany, and was going to attend K-State. I needed somewhere to live, and they needed a roommate. It all fell into place for us," he said.

The three future-roommates' parents approved of the situation, and soon, the students moved in together.

Although none of the three had lived with a roommate of the opposite sex before, all agreed the new living situation has been a pleasant change.

Cook said Blachly has made the once-chaotic house a stable one.

"Ken is mature and responsible," Cook said.

"He has made things around the house cleaner and helps organize our bills. It is nice that all our bills now are paid on time."

"We never get mad at each other," Peterson said.

"Ken knows what pisses us off and will often do it on purpose to get a rise out of us. Other than that, things couldn't be better."

Even though things for the three are working out, the roommates had to make their share of adjustments to live with someone of the opposite sex.

Blachly said the most difficult thing for him has been dealing with the women's mood swings.

"Before I moved in, all we would do was party together," Blachly said. "Now I have had the opportunity to get to know their personalities better, as well as their habits. Girls are girls, and we all know they have their times. Dealing with their emotions can be tough."

Blachly said his new roommates, especially Cook, can turn on him in a second.

"Crystal complains about everything. It all has to be her way," Blachly said. "For instance, you could barely shut the door, and she will say that you're slamming it. The girls claim I rattle the house when I do it, but the only thing shaking this place is Ashley and her boyfriend."

Having roommates of the opposite sex has been more of a problem for Cook and Peterson than Blachly. The women claim their personal lives have been affected significantly by the new arrangements.

"I was dating a guy when Ken moved in who didn't like the idea of me having a male roommate," Peterson said.

"Although things didn't work out with him, my new boyfriend and Ken get along well and have become drinking buddies."

Blachly said he has been enjoying the single life and always gets hassled by his roommates whenever he brings a girl home.

"Crystal and Ashley both live upstairs, and my room is downstairs," Blachly said.

"I do my best to sneak my guests in and out, but I always end up getting crap from them."

Other than an occasional flash from Blachly, all three have kept nudity to themselves.

Cook, Peterson and Blachly all denied that romance could ever arise among one another.

The three are happy just to be friends.

"I really care about the girls and don't want to see them get hurt," Blachly said.

"I guess in a way, I have become sort of a brother figure to them."

Peterson said she agreed.

"We are closer now than we ever were before," she said.

In the end, all three said they would recommend having a roommate of the opposite sex.

"I would definitely say it is a good thing," Cook said.

"But I feel it is important to know the people you are going to live with first. We all used to be friends in high school and were able to carry that over to what we have now."

Chocolate's rich history, sweet taste perfect for Valentine's

SETH BISHOP

On the menu

A weekly column that critiques restaurants or discusses the details of cuisine.

Creamy, sweet, rich, dark, bitter, sensuous, intense, evocative and delicious – chocolate has a passion all its own. And it has a history just as rich as its taste.

Derived from the cacao bean, chocolate was a highly praised commodity in Mayan and Aztec societies. Cacao beans were exchanged as money in these ancient times.

Christopher Columbus brought cacao beans back to Europe, but they were easily overlooked for more obvious treasure. In 1519, Spanish conquistador Hernando Cortez sent cacao beans back to Spain, where the chocolate drink made from them soon caught on.

Spain managed to keep its discovery a secret for 100 years before the rest of Europe realized what it was missing.

The French government ran a near monopoly on chocolate, and in that country, only the royal court was allowed to indulge. One enterprising Frenchman opened a public chocolate house in London, and by the mid 1700s, there were as many chocolate houses as there were coffee houses.

Chocolate has long been prized not only for its taste, but for its apparent aphrodisiacal qualities. The virile Emperor Montezuma II drank nothing but chocolate before attending to his harem for the night. The 18th-century legendary lover, Casanova, followed Montezuma's example and consumed large quantities of chocolate prior to his amorous adventures. The infamous Marquis de Sade slipped chocolate into desserts at the soirees he threw, in order to enliven his guests' libidos.

Is chocolate an aphrodisiac? It tastes heavenly, and yet seems so decadent. "Theobroma Cacao," the name of the cacao tree, means "food of the gods."

But something this good has got be bad for us, right? Wrong!

Modern research has shown chocolate is chock-full of antioxidants – those mysterious, yet beneficial chemicals the average layperson knows nearly nothing about. What we do know is antioxidants are good for us, which means eating chocolate is OK.

From the ancient Americas to modern-day Manhattan, we know the pleasures we derive from chocolate. We also know chocolate is, quite literally, out of this world. All United States and Russian manned space missions have included chocolate rations for morale.

Whether you drink it, melt it, bake it, dip it, mix it, or munch it, chocolate is a required part of Valentine's Day.

'Indy' movie delayed

Paramount has confirmed that production is on hold for the fourth installment of the Indiana Jones film series. Steven Spielberg, George Lucas and Harrison Ford, who has played the swashbuckling archaeologist in the first three films, are tabling the project because of script rewrites, Paramount reported this week.

Lucas

The film's targeted release date of July 4, 2005, will be pushed back, studio execs say, adding that production on the movie might not even begin until next year.

By that time, Ford will be 63.

The Indiana Jones trilogy began in 1981 with the release of "Raiders of the Lost Ark," followed by "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom" in 1984 and "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" in 1989.

'Star Wars' coming to DVD

"Star Wars" fans are anticipating the release of the science fiction trilogy on DVD in September, according to www.CNN.com.

The four-disc boxed set will include all three digitally remastered films, and the fourth disc will have bonus features and documentaries on the making of the films.

The boxed set will be released eight months before the final installment of the "Star Wars" prequels hits theaters in May 2005. The final of the three prequels deals with Anakin Skywalker's gradual transition to the Dark Side. Hayden Christensen is returning to portray Skywalker; Natalie Portman, too, will reprise her role as Padme Amidala, his wife and future mother of Luke and Leia.

"Star Wars," starring Mark Hammill and Carrie Fisher, opened in 1977; the next two films, "The Empire Strikes Back" and "Return of the Jedi," were released in 1980 and 1983, respectively.

Hilton steamed at site

Socialite Paris Hilton is suing an Internet company for $15 million, alleging the company illegally distributed the famous tape of Hilton and her ex-boyfriend having sex.

Hilton

The lawsuit targets Panama-based Kahatani Ltd. of engaging in "unauthorized and illegal exploitation."

Other companies that have tried to capitalize on Hilton's escapades include Seattle-based Internet porn company Marvad Corp., which nixed its plans to hawk copies of the tape after learning Hilton failed to give her consent.

Evans checks in to rehab

R&B singer Faith Evans and her husband agreed this week to undergo drug rehab treatment in exchange for stopping further prosecution in a drug-possession case.

Evans

Evans and her husband, Todd Russaw, were arrested in Georgia last week for possession of cocaine and marijuana after they were stopped during a traffic accident.

When news of the arrest reached the ears of those closest to her, Evans' lawyer asked her fans to pray for her.

Suicide bomber kills dozens near Baghdad police station

Crowd blames Americans

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

David Guttenfelder | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Iraqis carry away the body of a family member after identifying him at a hospital in Iskandariyah, south of Baghdad, Tuesday. A truck bomb exploded outside the police station as dozens of would-be police recruits lined up to apply for jobs, and a hospital official said at least 50 people were killed and another 50 injured.

ISKANDARIYAH, Iraq – A suicide bomber blew up a truckload of explosives Tuesday outside a police station south of Baghdad, killing up to 53 people and wounding scores – including would-be Iraqi recruits lined up to apply for jobs.

The blast in this predominantly Shiite Muslim city followed the disclosure Monday of a letter from an anti-American operative to al-Qaeda's leadership asking for help in launching attacks against the Shiites to undermine the U.S.-run coalition and the future Iraqi government.

Many angry townspeople blamed the Americans for the blast, and Iraqi police had to fire weapons in the air to disperse dozens of Iraqis who stormed the shattered remains of the station hours after the explosion.

"This missile was fired from a U.S. aircraft," said Hadi Mohy Ali, 60. "The Americans want to tear our unity apart."

No U.S. or other coalition forces were hurt, said Lt. Col. Dan Williams, a military spokesman in Baghdad.

It was at least the eighth vehicle bombing in Iraq this year, and followed warnings from occupation officials that insurgents would step up attacks against Iraqis who work with the U.S.-led coalition, especially ahead of the planned June 30 transfer of sovereignty to a provisional Iraqi government.

The Iraqi Interior Ministry and the local police chief said the bombing was carried out by a suicide driver who detonated a red pick-up truck at razor wire and sandbagged security barricades in front of the station.

However, Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt said it was unclear whether the bombing was the work of a suicide driver or whether the vehicle was parked and then detonated.

Casualty figures varied.

The U.S. military command reported 35 dead and 75 wounded, but said those figures could be low since Iraqi authorities were handling the investigation.

The Iraqi Interior Ministry said 40 to 50 people were killed and up to 100 wounded, including four policemen.

However, a local hospital director, Razaq Jabbar, put the number at 53 dead and 60 wounded – all believed to be Iraqis.

"This figure might increase," he said. "There were some body parts that haven't been identified yet. Some more bodies may be trapped under the rubble."

The explosion reduced parts of the station to rubble and damaged nearby buildings. The street in front of the station was littered with the wreckage of shattered vehicles as well as pieces of glass, bricks, mangled steel and pieces of clothing.

Policeman Wissam Abdul-Karim said he was standing in front of the nearby courthouse when "I heard a very strong explosion" and was thrown to the ground.

"It was the day for applying for new recruits," Abdul-Karim said. "There were tens of them waiting outside the police station."

Insurgents have mounted a string of car and suicide bombings in recent weeks.

The deadliest so far has been in the northern city of Irbil on Feb. 1, when two suicide bombers blew themselves up at two Kurdish party offices celebrating a Muslim holiday, killing at least 109 people.

On Jan. 18, a suicide car bomb exploded near the main gate to the U.S.-led coalition's headquarters in Baghdad, killing at least 31 people.

No group claimed responsibility for Tuesday's bombing.

Manhattan company creates product that could combat chemical warfare

By Leigh Ochsner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new defense against possible bioterrorism attacks has been created in Manhattan.

The Manhattan-based product, First-Act, provides the first response to an emergency with a new defense against toxic chemicals and chemical warfare agents.

NanoScale Materials Inc., markets, develops, produces and supplies nanochemistry-based products, including Fast-Act. It has worked closely with the government, which has provided more than $10 million in funding.

Tom Allen, vice president of marketing and sales, said nothing on the market is as extensive as First-Act.

Other products combat only chemical warfare agents, not toxic chemicals or vapor hazards.

In addition, the other products require premixing and special equipment. The water-based products do not work in cold climates, Allen said.

Although he did not develop Fast-Act, chemistry professor Ken Klabunde founded NanoScale in 1995 through the K-State Research Foundation and the Mid-America Commercialization Corporation.

Klabunde has been researching nanoparticles for more than 25 years.

The Fast-Act absorbent could be used against nerve agents, such as the liquid used in the Japanese-subway attack, Klabunde said. The absorbent material breaks and immobilizes the dangerous phosphorus fluorine bond, creating a non-poisonous solid.

The absorbent white powder is on the market as "a way of protecting fireman, policeman, first responders and military people," Klabunde said.

In their normal state, crystals are not very chemically reactive. After the crystals are made smaller by a chemical process, they react faster than in their normal states.

"It's a fast process, so crystal growth is only for a short instant – then we isolate it," Klabunde said.

"You're not changing the atoms into something else.

"It's just that they react much faster and at lower temperatures."

Fast-Act can be used like a dry fire extinguisher or in pellet form.

Currently, Rice University and an institute in Germany are the only other colleges conducting nanotechnology research for environmental improvement.

"There are lots of companies and institutes doing research in nanotechnology. It's a growing hot field of science," Klabunde said.

"Our niche, though, is in using these nanomaterials for doing environmental remediation."

SOLDIER | Fort Riley man returns home to recover from injuries sustained in Iraqi explosion

injuries include loss of limbs and permanent or long-term disability.

If a soldier gets injured, breaks a leg or has a minor shrapnel wound, he receives treatment in Iraq.

If a soldier needs surgery, he could be sent to Kuwait, Germany, or other locations in Iraq for treatment, Robinson said.

Even if a soldier is sent to Fort Riley because of injuries, that doesn't guarantee he or she is home for good.

"If they are recovered from their injuries, they could be returned to duty at any time," Robinson said.

For wounds that are emotional rather than physical, counseling services are provided.

Chaplains are also available for spiritual guidance.

Chaplain Lt. Col. Daniel McClure said one of the most prevalent emotions he sees in soldiers is guilt.

"Most of the time there's always the question in their head if they could have done something different," McClure said.

"Truth is, most of the time no, you can't avoid it, that's just the way it is."

Not every soldier who comes back wounded needs counseling.

McClure said other things, such as issues with family, finances or faith can add to a soldier's mental stress.

An injury that will not heal properly or an amputation might also increase the soldier's need for counseling.

Despite his injuries, Mosner says he feels fine emotionally.

He is not seeing a counselor or on any mood-altering medication.

"It doesn't bother me. I don't have any flashbacks," Mosner said.

"I don't have any emotional disorder because of it."

What does bother Mosner is staying at home while his comrades are still in combat.

"It's good to be back home, but then, it kind of sucks," Mosner said, "Because you're here and your guys are there."

Academic probation given for less than 2.2 GPA

By Melissa Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brandi Brinegar received the disappointing news two semesters ago.

She was in her second semester at K-State, and the senior in marketing was notified by the university that she had been put on academic warning after she received her semester grades.

"It's difficult to juggle both work and school," Brinegar said.

As a result, she began making lifestyle changes to bring her grades up.

"I wasn't very pleased, but I decided to get extra help from my professors and take less hours to get my GPA back up," Brinegar said. "I worked less and spent a lot more time studying."

Brinegar isn't alone.

According to the Registrar's Office, 2,227 students were put on academic warning for the fall semester.

Although many students cringe at the thought of an academic warning – more often referred to as academic probation – not all understand the terms that put a warning into effect.

To determine an academic warning, each college follows certain guidelines that are set by the university, said Alison Wheatley, assistant dean for the College of Arts and Sciences.

According to university guidelines, if a student earns less than a 2.2 grade point average in a semester, he or she is subject to be put on academic probation.

After this, students will be allowed the following semester to raise their GPA, but if they fail to do so, the students will be dismissed.

A dismissal can be automatic for any student – regardless of his or her year in school – who receives lower than a 1.0 GPA during any semester while in attendance at K-State.

Students who have been dismissed will only be readmitted after being approved for reinstatement by the academic standards committee of the desired college.

A student must wait two semesters before being considered for reinstatement.

Because the university determines who will be dismissed, it is each dean's office that arranges the standards which qualifying students for readmission.

For example, in the College of Business, students qualify for dismissal when they fall below a 2.75 to a 3.0 GPA, depending on their field of study, said Ike Ehie, associate dean for the College of Business.

"This system works fine, and I look for it to continue for a long time," Ehie said.

Another account of academic warning immediately would occur if an individual has violated the honor code in any way, according to university guidelines.

If this should happen, the university's honor council would be responsible for examining the student and determining the penalty.

BUSH | White House releases military records to silence Democratic candidates

a family friend.

Bush says he recalls showing up for drills in Alabama, but his supporters have struggled to prove it.

Bush was not paid for any service during a five-month period in 1972, from May through September, according to the records released with Bush's approval Tuesday.

He was paid for two days in October and four days in November and none in December 1972.

He was not paid for February or March 1973.

The records do not indicate what duty Bush performed or where he was.

Nevertheless, spokesman McClellan repeatedly held up the 13-page packet his office had released, and he declared in his televised briefing, "I think these documents show that he fulfilled his duties."

At the same time, officials were careful to stop short of claiming that the records proved definitively that Bush had shown up for all the Guard duties he was expected to.

Indeed, the payroll documents and annual service "point summaries" could throw fuel onto a story the White House wants to quench this election year.

KERRY | Democratic leader dominates Tuesday primaries in Tennessee, Virginia; Bush's ratings drop more

Edwards, a successful trial lawyer before entering politics, tells voters at every stop he is the only candidate who could beat Texas-reared Bush in his own backyard, the South, yet he lost to a Massachusetts Brahmin in Dixie. Edwards will remain in the race, aides said Tuesday, pointing his troubled campaign to Wisconsin and March 2, when 10 delegate-rich states hold elections.

"We're going to have an election, not a coronation," Edwards told cheering supporters in Milwaukee.

With some Southern comfort, Kerry has won 12 of 14 contests – seven by nearly half the vote – on the East and West coasts, in the Midwest, the Great Plains and the Southwest.

Awash in confidence, Kerry planned to take Wednesday and Thursday off to nurse a cough and make telephone calls from home in Washington, D.C. He focused on Bush, not his party foes.

"The wreckage of the Bush economy is all around us," Kerry told supporters as some party elders said it was about time to rally behind a nominee.

Voters in the two states, like those in most of the first dozen contests, said the ability to defeat President Bush was the top quality they sought in a candidate– and they sided 6-to-1 with Kerry, according to exit polls.

"Anybody but Bush," said Charles Edwards, 50, of Falls Church, Va., who decided to vote for Kerry as he entered his voting booth. "I'd vote for the devil."

Bush's poll ratings have dropped amid questions about his use of U.S. intelligence in deciding to go to war in Iraq. As Democrats cast their votes, the White House released pay records – echoed by Kerry – about whether the president fulfilled his Vietnam-era commitment.

The subject didn't come up Tuesday night, though Kerry said he and his fellow Vietnam veterans are still fighting for their country.

"For more than three years, this administration has failed to tell the truth about their economic record," Kerry told supporters.

"What we showed today is the mainstream values that I've been talking about, fairness and hope and hard work and love of country, are more important than boundaries and birthplace," the Massachusetts senator said.

"People want change in the country. They want to move forward in a new direction and I think I'm articulating what that new direction can be," Kerry said.

With 97 percent of the vote in Virginia, Kerry had 51 percent, Edwards 27 percent, Clark 9 percent, Dean 7 percent, Al Sharpton 3 percent and Rep. Dennis Kucinich of Ohio 1 percent. In Tennessee, with 63 percent reporting, Kerry had 42 percent, Edwards 26 percent, Clark 23 percent, Dean 4 percent and Sharpton 2 percent.

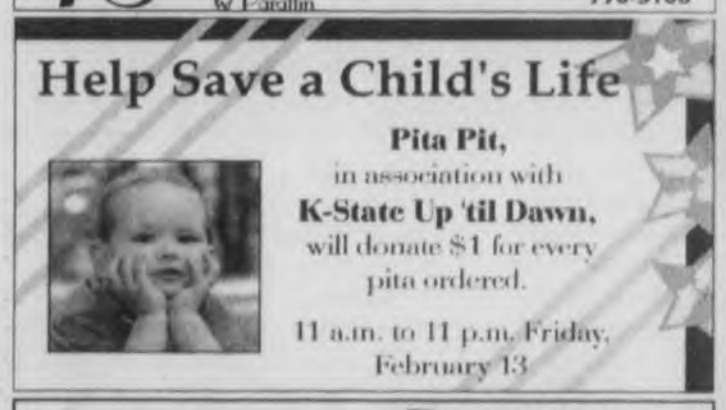
Counting early results from Tuesday's races, Kerry now has 484 delegates to Dean's 182, with Edwards at 146. A total of 2,162 are needed to nominate.

Half of the voters said they made up their mind in the last week, many in the last three days, according to exit polls.

Eight in 10 said they were angry or dissatisfied with Bush, and Kerry finished strong among them.



"I like the fact that he's a war hero," said Celia Ambrester, 69, of Knoxville, Tenn. Kerry won three Purple hearts, one Bronze star and one Silver star in Vietnam.

For Edwards, Clark and Dean, the temptation to stay in the race is strong because the front-runner has not been tested by scandal or miscues thus far in the primary season.

Some voters were already looking. Bob Casey, 68, of Memphis, Tenn., sided with Clark after calling Kerry a liberal "from back East." Eugene Robinson, 32, of Richmond, Va., voted for Clark because "he wasn't some smarmy politician who was ready to talk about all the laws he's passed and all the committees he's been on."

Though both Clark and Edwards have denied any interest in a vice presidential nomination, their future viability may come into play as they decide how long to fight Kerry.

Valuables stolen daily from cars

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Locking your car isn't enough.

Although the streets of Manhattan seem relatively safe, theft is a common occurrence.

"I would say burglaries from vehicles happen every day," Capt. John Doehling of the Riley County Police Department said. "I don't have the exact statistics, but I'd say we see at least one vehicle burglary every day. Some days we might not have any, but then others we might have two or three. We could even have five or six in a day's time."

Doehling said although the RCPD has tried to inform the public it is unwise to leave valuables in cars, burglaries are still happening.

He said people should use common sense and make sure their cars are locked, although that doesn't ensure the vehicle won't be burglarized.

"If you have to leave something in your car, leave it in your trunk, or cover it in some way," he said. "If you can't do either of those, then you should take it inside with you."

Doehling said safety precautions pertaining to parking can be taken as well. He said he realizes some people can't choose where they park, but those who have some control over parking should do so in a well-lit and open area.

"Some people have to park near or in an alley or in a crowded residential area with a lot of bushes. If that's the case, I'd take everything of value into the house with me," he said.

Panera, Capitol Federal to join shopping area

Seth Child Commons continues to develop

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Panera Bread and Capitol Federal Savings soon will call Seth Child Commons home.

These two businesses soon will be at the location, along with some other retail and office space whose occupants are not yet known, said Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

Mike Babich, vice president of Kansas City Panera Bread Operations, said he could confirm Panera Bread was "almost surely" going to have a location in the Seth Child Commons area.

"It's about 90 percent done," he said. "We still have to finish up the lease agreement and stuff," he said.

Babich said the company decided to locate in Manhattan because the citizens of Manhattan were "above average" in every category they look for.

Baseball coach Brad Hill works through a base-running drill during practice Tuesday at the Brandeberry Indoor Complex. Hill is set to begin his career as the new leader of the program when the Wildcats open their season Friday at Houston in the Minute Maid Classic.

Suffering program finds renewed focus with new coach

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, and Coach Brad Hill has his eyes set on his players bunting in a batting cage in Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

He remains quiet, his arms crossed over his chest while he intensely focuses on each player hitting in the cage.

Minutes later, he turns his attention toward his pitchers, who are working on their first-base pick-off moves.

He strolls over to the base runners at first base, instructing them to take at least a four-and-a-half to five-foot lead, in order to effectively steal second.

Hill continues to move around from drill to drill, never stopping, and ready to teach with a glove on his hand.

This, his baseball players said, is the reason they are excited to play for him.

This, many have said, is the new era of K-State baseball.

HIRING HILL

When former coach Mike Clark resigned last May, Athletics Director Tim Weiser said he immediately began to look at Hill as a candidate to fill the vacancy.

As fellow Emporia State baseball player, Weiser said he knew about Hill almost 20 years ago.

"He was coming in as I was leaving Emporia State," Weiser said. "Over the years I kept track of his career and realized the guy was doing very well

Who is Brad Hill

- 1985: Brad Hill graduated from Emporia State University and ended his college career by being selected as a baseball NAIA All-America selection for the fourth time.
- 1988-1990: Hill was the head coach at Hutchinson Community College for three seasons with an overall record of 83-50.
- 1991-1994: Hill was an assistant coach for the University of Kansas under his college coach, Dave Bingham.
- 1995-2003: Hill was the head coach for Central Missouri State in Warrensburg, Mo. He was the winningest active Division II coach, compiling a 418-91 overall record. He was a seven-time Central Region Coach of the Year and led CMS to the NCAA Tournament each season. He concluded his ninth season by winning a national championship.

HEADLINES

The Associated Press

Disney deal
Cable television giant Comcast Corp. made a surprise bid to buy The Walt Disney Co. for more than $54 billion, a deal that would take advantage of Disney's growing vulnerability to create the world's biggest media conglomerate.

Bombing kills 47
A second suicide bombing in as many days killed up to 47 people Wednesday, pushing the number in the back-to-back attacks to 100. Again, Iraqis were the targets — this time, a crowd of volunteers for Iraq's new army — in an apparent campaign to wreck U.S. plans to transfer power by summer.

Ban rejected
The Massachusetts Legislature narrowly rejected a compromise proposal that sought to legalize civil unions but ban same-sex marriages, delivering a setback to lawmakers who wanted to avoid taking the divisive issue head-on.

Clark withdraws
Wesley Clark, a retired four-star general unable to command significant support as a first-time presidential candidate dropped out of the race for the White House. He coupled his withdrawal with words of praise for his remaining rivals Sen. John Kerry, Sen. John Edwards and former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean.

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Valentine's Day gifts: Dos and Don'ts

CHOCOLATE
Do: Buy her a box of her favorite, delicious, insanely expensive chocolates.

Don't: Skimp and find a chocolate Santa on clearance.

PLANT LIFE
Do: Buy her roses, tulips or carnations. Ladies love the fresh fragrance and aesthetic pleasure of these flowers.

Don't: Buy her a hydroponics system in order to expand your cannibus project into her apartment.

JEWELRY
Do: Load her down with diamonds.

Don't: Tell her they're diamonds when you actually bought them from some guy in Mexico.

FOOD
Do: Make a romantic, candle-lit dinner for two.

Don't: Include corn dogs in that romantic dinner.

NIGHTWEAR
Do: Give her lingerie to make her feel sexy.

Don't: Give her flannel pajama pants to make her feel like a frumpy lumberjack.

BOOKS
Do: Get a couple's journal to open more honest discussion about your relationship.

Don't: Get "Dr. Phil's Ultimate Weight Loss Solution: The 7 Keys to Weight Loss Freedom."

STUFFED ANIMALS
Do: Buy her a cute teddy bear, bunny or other overly adorable, cuddly toy.

Don't: Buy her wrestling buddies, giant lips, pillow people or anything else you can buy from the thrift store.

FOR AROUND THE HOUSE
Do: Make a pledge to do household chores — dishes, laundry, cooking, etc. — and lessen the amount of work she does.

Don't: Get her an apron so she won't get dirty while she's cooking your dinner.

MEMORIES

Don't: Bring up that time you got trashed and made out with her sister.

ANIMALS
Do: Get a puppy, if you're in it for a long-term relationship. Go to the shelter, and choose it together for extra brownie points.

Don't: Trap anything wild and present it to her.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA
Professional Scouter Recognized for 30 Years of Service
Robert Hedley of Manhattan has served 30 years with the Boy Scouts of America. Robert also helps as an advisor for Alpha Phi Omega, a co-ed service fraternity, and a committee member of Rotaract, an international service club at K-State. During his time in Manhattan, the Pawnee District has earned the highest standard of being a Quality District for the past six years. The Pawnee District has been the top district in the Coronado Area Council for the past three years as well as the #1 district in the state of Kansas.
These accomplishments have been made by continuing to improve the programs that were already established and to begin new programs. These programs range from cub scout activities such as a fun and fishing day, a district zoo day, Boy Scout camporees, and a merit badge day. There are 1,450 youth that participate in the Boy Scout program in Manhattan. The Pawnee District has found success by setting high goals and meeting them. They work to increase their membership and budget each year. If any student would like to help with the scouting program, please call the Boy Scouts at 776-6788.

Same-sex marriage unlikely in Kansas

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though the Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled a state law unconstitutional, gay couples and gay rights activists in Kansas may not see any changes in Kansas law.

John Fliter, professor of political science, said Kansas is one of 38 states that has passed a statute prohibiting same-sex marriages.

States such as Hawaii and Vermont, Fliter said, have permitted "civil unions," which are essentially a secular version of same-sex marriages.

"In the aftermath of what Hawaii did, Congress passed the Defense of Marriage Act, which says states do not have to recognize same-sex marriages from other states," he said.

"So federal law says just because Massachusetts recognizes it, Kansas doesn't have to."

In terms of the Kansas law being challenged, Fliter said a challenger to the Kansas Supreme Court could cite the Massachusetts decision in its case, but Fliter said he doesn't think there will be a change in Kansas law anytime soon.

"The ruling may be cited, but the court is under no obligation to adhere to that ruling," he said.

Fliter said that if the U.S. Supreme Court were to make that ruling, then Kansas would have no choice, but he didn't believe this to be likely.

"I don't see five votes on the Supreme Court to officially recognize same-sex marriage," he said.

Fliter said, while the issue is important, he hopes it doesn't become a "wedge issue" in the upcoming election.

"It's really not the biggest issue facing our country," he said.

Nicole Corcoran, communication director for Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, said the Massachusetts ruling will not affect Kansas.

"Kansas recognizes marriage as being between a man and a woman, and we don't see that changing," Corcoran said.

She said Kansas law is very clear, and the governor's office is more focused on issues it can address immediately.

"It isn't something the governor is in a position to make a decision on," Corcoran said.

Leigh Fine, president of Queer Straight Alliance, said the club did not officially sponsor any actions supporting gay marriage in Kansas.

"Most of QSA's concerns focus on the climate on campus and campus issues," Fine said. "We do have several people on QSA who are very passionate about the issue."

Professors address local farming

Speakers discuss need to protect native species

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Mike Hayden, former governor of Kansas and current Secretary of the Interior for Fish, Wildlife and Parks, discusses how the public land condition in Kansas has been declining in the past years, Wednesday afternoon in Forum Hall.

Large farms have contributed to the poverty of Kansas farmers.

A group of speakers said Wednesday that Kansas and other Great Plains states need to focus on returning the land back to its natural state by ending the reign of corporate agri-business and increasing the amount of publicly-owned land.

K-State professors joined Frank and Deborah Popper, authors and professors from New York; and former Kansas governor and current assistant secretary of the Interior for Fish, Wildlife and Parks Mike Hayden to relay this message to students in the Union Forum Hall.

The Poppers published an article called "The Great Plains: From Dust to Dust," in which they argue for the creation of "The Buffalo Commons."

This idea revolves around reintroducing an emphasis on buffalo, as well as other native species, that have been on the decline since civilization, both ecologically and economically.

In this article, the Poppers predicted a rapid economic and ecological decline in the Great Plains.

"We never really expected the article to have such a large following," Frank Popper said.

While each speaker agreed on the end goal of retaining the prosperity of plains communities, they addressed the situation in different ways. Deborah Popper said the expansionist mindset of prior generations plays a role in the deterioration of the natural grasslands.

The application of European and eastern U.S. ideas of civilization and farming to a region differing greatly topographically caused an emphasis on land ownership and farming that proved to be detrimental to the region.

The Poppers said they believe it is more important to focus on smaller, localized farmers who compete in a local market, not an international one.

Hayden had publicly criticized the article during and after his four-year term as governor from 1987 to 1991.

Now, Hayden said he believes reality may even be worse than the Poppers had imagined.

"As a Republican, it's hard for me to say this. If you look at communities that have survived, they all have been built around community infrastructure," he said.

Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, assistant professor of history, said the prediction of the Buffalo Commons involves history, in a way, repeating itself.

The mass emigration of individuals from towns in the Great Plains, she said, is a return to Dust Bowl-like conditions.

TO THE POINT

College should trust students' decision-making

The College of Engineering's policy that restricts the number of hours students can enroll in is unrealistic.

According to the policy, any student who does not meet the college's satisfactory academic progress in a semester is unable to enroll in the same amount of hours for the next semester. The only hours the student is able to enroll in are those in which the student received a grade of a C or higher.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The policy, as indicated, was proposed by faculty members to affirm students have the ability to set and achieve reasonable goals.

As a result, it's the responsibility of the students to decide the amount of academic coursework they can handle each semester.

This policy also makes it difficult for some students to remain full-time students, which in turn causes problems in receiving financial aid or student health insurance.

These problems can be eliminated if the college would understand that as adults, students can determine their own academic course load.

Not-so-silver screen

Manhattan has a lot to learn from neighboring fine arts theaters

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

Most people don't give much thought to Salina.

For the majority of K-State students in Manhattan, Salina is nothing but a mere afterthought. However, something about that city has caught my eye – something that makes Salina a more attractive place than Manhattan ever was.

Salina has a fine arts cinema.

Despite the efforts made to bring cultured entertainment to the city, Manhattan remains a one-theater town.

Aside from the Salina Art Center Cinema, one would have to drive to Lawrence or Kansas City for decent cinematic features.

This is not to say Manhattan is a cultural wasteland.

We are blessed with a number of art galleries, live local music venues and performance art theaters. However, the lack of a decent independent cinema is devastating.

While the average moviegoer can be satisfied by the normal lineup of semi-entertaining films that makes the rounds each week through corporate multiplexes, film is much more than that.

Film has become a medium for revelation. In only the past year, documentaries have been released that are insightful and tell of our modern society.

One such film should be required viewing for everyone: Errol Morris' "The Fog of War."

Imagine 30 years from now, a then-retired Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld sits and spends dozens of hours in front of a camera, spilling the beans on every major policy decision issued by the administrations he served.

Rewind to the present day. Replace Rumsfeld with former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, who presided during the administrations of Presidents John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson – the man who oversaw the Vietnam War.

The reality of a world with nuclear arsenals is never clearer than in this film. McNamara warns that nuclear war barely was averted and it remains a threat today.

This film needs to be seen by everyone who wishes to contribute to society – to vote, to have an influence.

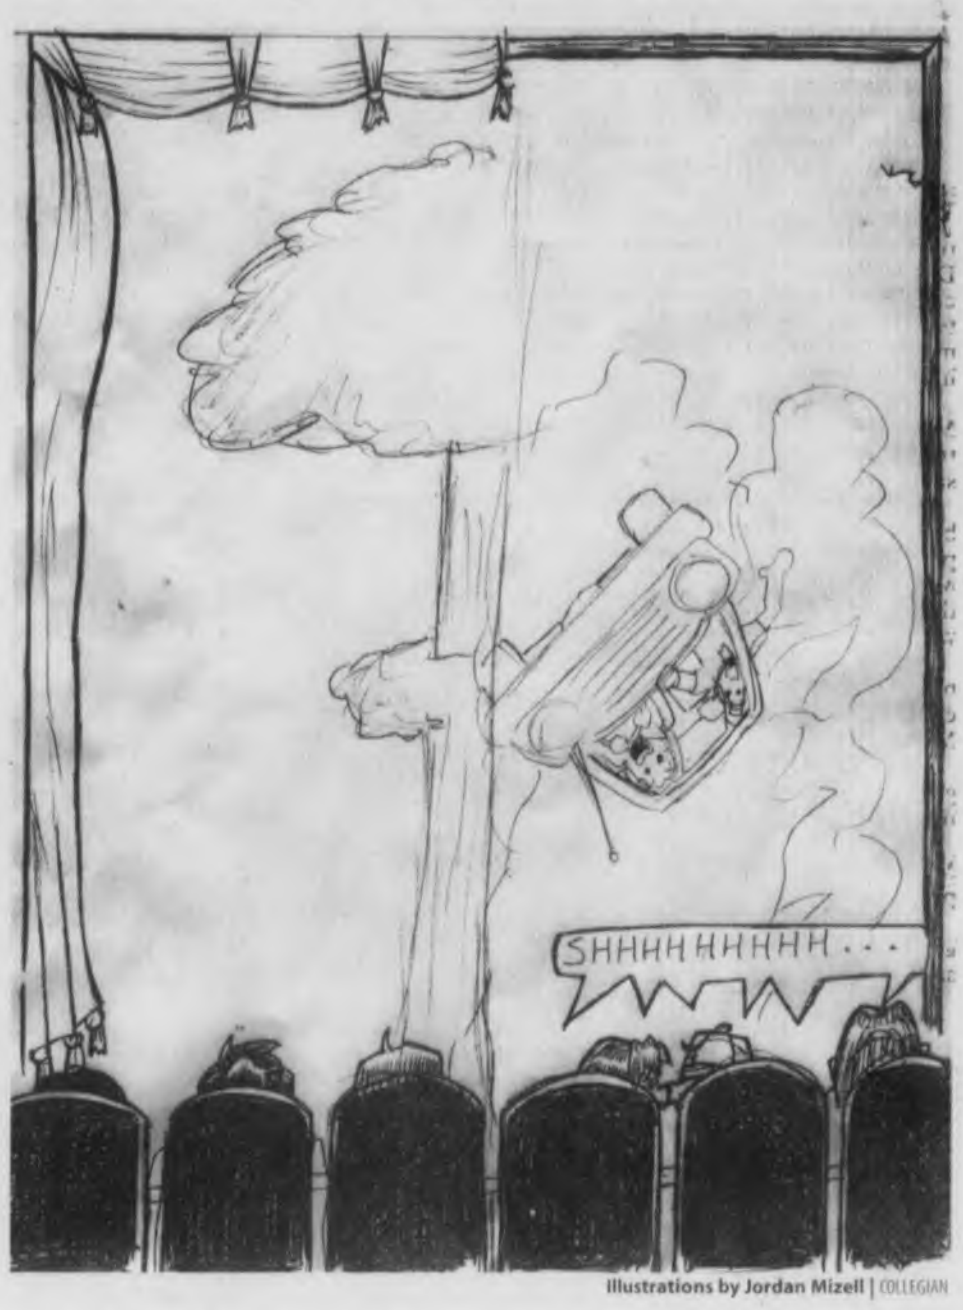
"The Fog of War" will begin playing during spring break. Unless you plan on going to some far-off locale to work on a community service project, you will be wasting that break by not seeing this film.

It would be a disservice to say only the films make the Art Center Cinema worthwhile.

Film, like any other art form, should be discussed and debated, and the Art Center Cinema makes significant efforts to host film discussions.

An upcoming feature for the cinema, "Amandla!" will be followed by a discussion of the film with Rev. Dr. Kennedy Mukwindidza about the subject of apartheid in South Africa.

More often, the best films are not finding their ways to mainstream theaters.



American Multi-Cinema Inc. has made efforts to include independent features among their megaplex lineups, but they are the exception to the rule – a rule that thinks the average American needs at least 10 different times available to see "Dude, Where's My Car?"

Independent theaters, as a general rule, are much cleaner, have friendlier staffs and provide a greater overall moviegoing experience.

The Tivoli Manor Square Cinema is a haven for film lovers in the Kansas City metropolitan area, playing great jazz, blues and other fine musical works in theaters between features.

There is very little any person can do about the cost of a ticket these days, and having no competition among cinemas within city limits hurts the consumer.

If driving to an independent cinema is the only other option, it serves as a message to the corporate chains – they are missing out on a potential market.

Columnist pledges to find date for Valentine's Day

GRANT REICHERT

Little-known to most people, Valentine's Day started as an ancient Aztec ritual where young virgins had their still-beating hearts ripped out of their chests. Throw in a few sappy Hallmark greeting cards, and here we are today.

Just kidding, of course.

The current face of Valentine's Day is much different. Now we have a sadistic, winged infant pumping barbed arrows into people to give them a taste of what love is really like.

Personally, Valentine's Day is my 12th favorite holiday – barely beaten out by Persistent Rash Day, but still ahead of Groundhog Day. The meat's just too tough.

I'm not saying love is bad, but do you think it's a mistake that Romeo and Juliet, the greatest love story this side of "Major Payne," ends in a double-suicide?

But still, I have high hopes for this Valentine's Day.

This year, I'm not going to carry out my usual ritual of devouring four bags of mini-candy bars and then watching Lifetime until I cry my bloated self to sleep. Instead, I fully intend to meet a human of the female persuasion.

And, unlike my girlfriends from high school, she won't be made-up or related.

I was sitting in Remedial Math 101, mathematically deducing the meaning of life (it's delicious pi, as you may have suspected), when, miraculously, I stumbled upon an even more startling discovery.

I do have a chance at getting a girl.

This discovery is greater than Newton's discovery of gravity with an apple, or possibly even when he invented the delicious figs that claim his name.

According to the 2000 Census, the American population is 51 percent female and 49 percent male – although both percentages are set to rise by 5 percentage points next year due to the Springer-ization of America.

Because there are 2 percent more girls than boys, some will have to choose between me or an all-expenses-paid life of celibate nunnery at a convent without air conditioning in sunny Guatemala.

Yeah, in effect I'm still the door-number-two booby prize here, so we'll assume that 0.5 percent of the girls will, by reason of insanity, incredibly low self-esteem or simply confusion, choose me.

That comes out to about 700,000 girls in the United States alone who have been rejected by every other male on Earth, all for me.

Cha-ching.

When adjusted for age – 18-74 to keep my options legal, yet open – and locality – Manhattan, where the men are men and so are half the women – I come out with a slightly less awe-inspiring but still more than adequate 9.06 females.

Of course, these females have been rejected by almost everyone.

Even that incredibly hairy guy who constantly makes chewing noises, refers to his authentic "Star Wars" figurines as "children," and could knit a sweater solely from the contents of his cavernous naval.

Mmm . . . I sure hope one of those girls is Jennifer Aniston.

But wait, I forgot to deduct the number of girls who insist on using horribly fruity hand lotions at obsessive-compulsive levels, seemingly in the ultimate quest for frictionless hands.

I may be extremely desperate and all, but I arbitrarily draw the line at the use of certain types of scented hand lotions.

Yessiree, this V-Day is looking better than most. No more pathetically single me.

It's plain old pathetic from here on out. Because somewhere out there, somewhere, is 0.06 percent of a girl, and she's destined for me.

Come to think of it, I did find an exceptionally long hair in my food the other day. Match made in heaven . . . er, I mean the Derby Dining Center.

But we are from two different worlds. So many questions ...

How could this ever work out?

Will the world accept us for who we are?

Is this hair even from a girl?

If I get food stuck in my teeth, could we engage in premarital flossing?

Sigh ... for the second time in my life, I feel that peculiar, fuzzy sensation known as love. The first time it turned out my appendix was severely inflamed to bursting. I was sicker than a Jackson family reunion.

I nearly died.

Happy V-Day.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

Mickayla Fink thinks you're a dimwit if you graduate from Yale and go to graduate school at Harvard.

So getting into the trunk of a car isn't the greatest idea, but haven't we all done something stupid when we're drunk?

I can't believe nobody has said anything about the fact that the guy in the trunk was wearing a dress.

Who do I have to call to get in touch with all these Manhattan Christian College girls? Anyone who can't go out past 11 at night, beautiful.

I've been thinking long and hard about this, but is Pluto the spawn of Neptune and Uranus? Or is it?

What do you call a person who hears a story second-hand, publishes it as fact and people believe it? A Manhattan Mercury reporter.

As much as they have tried, the White House still hasn't explained Bush's military record for a period of five months or how he got out of the service a year early at a time when over 10,000 Americans died in Vietnam.

Louie Novak, when girls get ready to go out at night, they don't base what they're gonna wear on your little scale of standards.

If you'd like some belly rolls, I got the bakery right over here.

Of all birds, I think the woodpecker has the most unfortunate name.

I think the entire Collegian staff is just jealous of how popular and beautiful the greek people are.

It's great that the Collegian finally has an eloquently expressive music writer. Jess Grant can review my music any day.

Paul Restivo, you wouldn't have all those problems if you would have paid attention in your Block One classes.

For the love of God, build us a parking garage. This is ridiculous.

Variety and women are the spices of life.

Pepsi distribution center coming to Manhattan

Establishment would create additional jobs for community

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pepsi may already be here, it is expanding and relocating.

Pepsi will build a distribution center at 703 Levee Drive, which is expected to be completed in August or September, said Jake Wassenberg, manager of the current Manhattan facilities.

Pepsi has two buildings in Manhattan. One is rented, and the other is already for sale, he said.

When the new building is built, truckloads of Pepsi products will be delivered to Manhattan instead of going through the current Marysville warehouse.

The company decided to build the new building because business had grown in Manhattan, Wassenberg said.

"We don't have room to grow with the current facilities."

He also said they expect Manhattan to continue to prosper.

"The growth in the area is going to be in Manhattan," he said.

Wassenberg said any growth in Pepsi's business should help with job opportunities.

"We will have some job creations," he said.

The new location of Pepsi should have a positive effect on the community, said Lyle Butler, Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce president.

"The potential creation of more jobs is good news for our local economy," Butler said.

He said Pepsi has treated Manhattan and K-State well.

"Pepsi and their company have been a good part of the community," he said.

The new building is good for both Pepsi and its company, he said.

"We're glad the company is staying," Butler said.

"It's good they are getting a new facility."

Did you know?

Pepsi comes to town

The new distribution center in Manhattan will begin operations at the end of the summer.

Engineering students dislike policy

Policy limits students' course load based on academic performance

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A policy decided by faculty from the College of Engineering has some of its students frustrated and concerned about their academic progress for future semesters.

The policy, which took effect this semester, limits the number of hours a student can take in a given semester to one more than the number of hours the student passed in the semester prior, Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, said.

"This is not an administrative policy," he said. "The college faculty decided on the policy."

According to the policy, engineering students must make satisfactory academic progress each semester enrolled. Satisfactory progress for engineering students is defined as having earned a C or better for each course enrolled in during the student's last regular semester at K-State.

If a student receives a D or F in the regular semester, he or she must limit his or her next regular semester enrollment.

King said the policy allows students to discuss extenuating circumstances with their advisers if they feel the policy affects them unfairly.

He said the policy may need some revamping, and the department is continually re-evaluating the policy, as it does with all of their policies.

King said the policy, while it may be controversial, is in the students' best interest.

"The bottom line is it is probably good advice for students anyway," he said.

Some students, however, disagree.

Thomas Kuhn, senior in electrical engineering, said the policy is vague and unfair.

"They sent out several e-mails last semester talking about the policy, but they weren't very clear," he said.

Kuhn said his adviser and department head were not clear on the precise scope of the policy.

"I am not a fan of the policy myself, simply because this is the sort of thing students should have the responsibility for themselves," he said.

"I am not a fan of the policy myself, simply because this is the sort of thing students should have the responsibility for themselves."

Thomas Kuhn
SENIOR IN ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING

Kuhn, whose hours are limited by the policy, said there were a wide range of people affected.

"Some people are only able to take one hour," he said, "but there are also people who have almost all A's and have one bad class."

Steven Tieszen, junior in mechanical engineering, said he agreed the policy could adversely affect good students.

"If you had one bad class, even if you've always gotten straight A's, you can be limited," he said.

Tieszen also said if students drop below full-time status because of one bad class, even if they have high GPAs, they can lose such benefits as health insurance and financial aid.

"Also, in upper-level engineering, some classes aren't offered every semester," he said. "If you are unable to take one of those classes, your graduation could be delayed for up to a year."

The number of hours one takes, Tieszen said, does not always correlate with academic performance.

Cory Pendergraft, senior in computer engineering, said he agrees.

"Basically, it's implying that time is the only factor that causes a person to get a D or an F," he said.

Pendergraft said there are many other factors, like the professor or even just a subject the student is not as good at.

He said he believes, because the policy fails to take into consideration other causes, it unfairly limits students.

"I knew they allowed for extenuating circumstances, but the administration makes it seem like it's all up to them," Pendergraft said.

Safe-sex group sells condom roses

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Zach Long | COLLEGIAN
Rachael Brungardt, sophomore in life science, sells condom roses Wednesday in the K-State Student Union. The Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators group is selling the roses as part of Sexual Responsibility Week.

Roses are red – or at least the wrappers of the LifeStyles condoms are.

To get one of these condom roses, students can stop by the Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators booth in the K-State Student Union.

The group is selling condom roses as part of Sexual Responsibility Week to raise funds to send members to the national Peer Educator Conference in Chicago next fall.

Rachael Brungardt, sophomore in life science and first-year SHAPE member, said she thought the roses were a good idea because they created a different way to encourage students to be sexually responsible.

"It reminds people that even though it's Valentine's Day, they need to be safe," she said.

"It's just a creative way to do that. Condoms reduce the risk of STDs, and that's what this group is all about.

"I just think they're cute. That's why I like them."

Bethany Trogstad, senior in family life and community service and SHAPE member, said the condoms for the roses were funded through Lafene Health Center, and the additional costs of floral wire and tape didn't dent the SHAPE budget too much.

"They're pretty inexpensive to make," she said.

Katherine McKenzie, senior in chemical biology and second-year SHAPE member, said SHAPE not only encourages safe sex, but also other sexual health measures.

"We always encourage people to get tested when they are with new partners, or when they are between partners," she said. "We want them to keep using condoms and be responsible – avoid risky behavior."

Carol Kennedy, SHAPE adviser, said the group's message is very important.

"Sexuality and sexual activity is such a large part of anyone's life," she said. "Our students have the opportunity to talk to their peers about the importance of sexual health. This is an avenue to make sure students are responsible and well-informed in the future."

Terri Kirwin, freshman in accounting, bought a rose, but not for the obvious reasons.

"It's just a different idea," she said.

, "I like roses and I have a bunch made out of different types of things, so I thought this was cool. And these won't die."

Sexperts to address STDs, pick-up lines

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Self-proclaimed sex experts at K-State should get ready for some competition.

The Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators are sponsoring the Battle of the Sexperts at 7 tonight in the Union Courtyard.

Carol Kennedy, SHAPE adviser and director of health promotions at Lafene Health Center, said the program would be educational as well as comedic.

She said it was set up as a competition among 10 teams, each with three to five members. The teams will compete in five rounds of competition.

"The first round is a competition on the best pickup lines," she said. "The subsequent rounds will deal with STD education and the prevention of STDs."

Kennedy said it won't be all work and no play, though.

"The activities are going to be highly entertaining, but they are a secret right now," she said.

Bethany Trogstad, senior in family life and community service and co-coordinator of the program, agreed.

"I think it will not only inform people about sexual health and awareness, but it's also going to be a good time. It's going to be cheap comedy," she said.

The winners of the competition will gain the bragging rights of being the campus sexperts, Kennedy said. However, the competitors aren't the only ones awarded prizes.

"People in the audience will have the opportunity to win T-shirts and other prizes," Kennedy said. "And the team with the most audience participation will also win a prize."

Kennedy said the goal of the program, which is part of Sexual Responsibility Week, is to provide an arena for students to learn about sexual health.

Jennifer Wiesner, sophomore in business and a first-semester SHAPE member, said Sexual Responsibility Week encourages people to be honest with their partners, as well as promotes behavior that reduces the risk of STDs or unintended pregnancies.

"It's important to promote safe sex," she said.

Trogstad, who has been a member of SHAPE for about a year, said she decided to help with the program for a few reasons.

"Basically, it not only gets the SHAPE and Lafene name out to campus and makes students aware of what we're doing and what we're promoting, but it also promotes sexual health awareness."

General education credits being evaluated

Committee seeking input from students, faculty for program's course list

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's University General Education program may be getting a facelift.

UGE is being evaluated, and the program will either be ousted or reconstructed.

K-State initiated its UGE program about seven years ago, and it took five or six years to get in place, Provost James Coffman said.

The UGE program is established by each undergraduate college.

These programs must meet three conditions, including an assurance that it provides breadth of education, there is a selection of at least 18 credit hours from a pool of approved UGE courses and a distribution of at least one-third UGE credits at a 300-level or above.

"It has served us well up to a point, but now we need to make some mid-course corrections in that program," Coffman said. "It's time the university started reevaluating that program and look at general education at K-State for the next 20 years."

"Courses are not being taught the way they were proposed, especially with graduate students, who may not have been taught how active learning is to take place."

James Goddard
FORMER CHAIR OF UNIVERSITY GENERAL EDUCATION PROCEDURES COMMITTEE

The process will probably take five years, Coffman said.

"It's important that processes be in progress when the new provost comes on the job so he or she can take it over and work with faculty to develop the next generation of general education," he said.

Coffman said by investigating general education and UGE, he is hoping to identify what the main issues are, as well as what the driving forces are for defining the best general education for the future.

"If we can accomplish by end of year, we will have come a long way," he said.

James Goddard, the former chair of the UGE Procedures Committee, worked with other faculty last fall to determine what some of the problems were with the UGE program that needed to be addressed immediately.

"We looked at several things," he said. "We tried to figure out better ways to evaluate courses, as well as other ways to approve courses, and how to shorten the time process for those."

The committee was especially concerned with the consistency of general education courses taught at K-State, Goddard said.

"Courses are not being taught the way they were proposed, especially with graduate students, who may not have been taught how active learning is to take place," he said.

The committee suggested that department heads review the courses and make sure they are taught the way they were intended when they were approved for general education, Goddard said.

A new committee, the General Education Steering Committee, will look at a more permanent solution starting this semester.

The committee will ask for ideas about what general education should be several years from now, but is not specifically aimed at UGE, Gerald Reeck, committee chair, said.

"Should it be UGE, or something that resembles UGE, or something quite different, are not questions we are going to answer," he said. "We are simply going to seek ideas from the campus community."

Researchers take cells from cloned embryo

By Lauran Neergaard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Researchers in South Korea for the first time have cloned a human embryo and then culled stem cells from it, marking an important step toward one day growing patients' own replacement tissue to treat diseases.

The experiment is sure to revive controversy over human cloning, both in the United States and internationally.

This is not cloning to make babies. Instead it's called therapeutic cloning, in which embryos that are the genetic twins of a particular patient are grown in a test-tube to supply master stem cells that can grow into any tissue–without being rejected by that patient's immune system.

The technique offers the potential of breakthrough treatments for diabetes, Parkinson's and other diseases, but any therapy is years away from being tested in people.

Scientists have used therapeutic cloning to partially cure laboratory mice with an immune system disease. And they know how to cull stem cells from human embryos left over in fertility clinics, offering the potential of cell therapy.

But attempts at cloning a human embryo in the stem-cell quest have failed until now.

Scientists from Seoul National University report they succeeded in using extremely fresh eggs donated by South Korean volunteers and finding a gentler way of handling the genetic material.

The report appears in Friday's edition of Science magazine.

It's elegant work that provides long-anticipated proof that the technique is possible using human cells, said stem-cell researcher Dr. Rudolf Jaenisch of the Whitehead Institute for Biomedical Research,.

Still, "it's not of practical use at this point," Jaenisch said, stressing that years of additional research are required.

New cell phone fee created to assist Riley County EMS

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fifty cents added to a cell phone bill could save lives.

The Federal Communications Commission announced to cell phone companies last fall a surcharge would be placed on cell phone bills to partially fund the emergency medical services that handle 911 calls.

A customer service representative from Cellular One said the company started a charge on its bills in November 2003.

Pat Collins, Riley County Emergency Management Director, said he is in favor of the surcharge.

He is a member of the legislative committee for the 911 users group.

"I have sent documents to the house utilities committee. I have followed the development of this charge pretty closely," Collins said.

Collins said a large percentage of the emergency calls Riley County receives are from cellular phones. He said revenue has dropped 15 percent in the past year due to people dropping their primary phones and switching to a cell phone.

"The fees associated with each subscriber will go to the state from different counties and will be distributed to the public service answering points," Collins said.

Collins said although the surcharge was started to assist emergency services in paying for costs in handling calls, he is not sure how much revenue it will generate.

Early vacation planning can cut costs

This excursion will take about 24 hours, but Needleman said it would be a nonstop trip all the way to his family's condo, where they plan to relax.

"It may not be one of the main spring break party spots, but there will be plenty of people for us to meet and party with," he said.

Not all students will be enjoying the sun for this break. Working at home is not what Katie Laswell had in mind, but she said she lacks the money to go anywhere.

"I will be at home this break with my parents," Laswell said. "We may spend a few days at our lake house, but it won't be a break since I'll have to help with painting and dry-wall."

Joe Naidu, president of Endless Summer Tours, said he takes pride in assuring customers' completely satisfaction.

"You can't go wrong when the whole town supports spring break," Naidu said. "The sponsors do a good job of making sure the atmosphere is an exciting one."

DVD releases replacing VHS; TV series, extras help popularity

By Christopher Harrop
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Summer blockbuster box office totals usually are strong, the home entertainment business is a booming industry, bolstered by the introduction of the digital versatile disc format in 1996.

While the DVD format has been the popular choice for the past few years, it wasn't until June 2003 that DVD rentals finally outnumbered VHS rentals during a one-week span, according to the Video Software Dealers Association.

Some local retailers, such as Wal-Mart, still stock both DVD and VHS formats for new releases.

"It's hard to say," Erin O'Neal, Wal-Mart electronics associate, said. "Sometimes we get new releases on both DVD and VHS."

O'Neal said about five to six times more DVDs arrive for new releases compared to VHS titles.

The rise in DVD popularity can be attributed in part to the release of television series and DVD's non-film material.

Kim Coder, manager at Digital Shelf, said although many feature films are available, a great deal of the DVDs in stock consist of non-feature DVDs and cult favorites.

"We have a lot of television shows, some music that's been put on DVD, either concerts or music videos put on DVD," Coder said. "We make a pretty decent effort to get that stuff into the store."

Retailers are not the only ones concerned with the changes.

Hale Library has one of the largest video collections in the Manhattan, and humanities reference librarian Ron Ratliff deals with the issue when purchasing new titles.

"In the last few years, we've bought more DVDs," Ratliff said. "If we can buy it in DVD, we do."

Ratliff said that change is coming to scholastic videos as well, with more titles being made available on DVD.

Anyone with a K-State ID can go to Hale and check out video titles. Those without the necessary means to view them at home can utilize the media rooms in Hale Reserves to watch the videos.

Although DVDs are the mainstream standard format, the entertainment technology industry is waging a battle over the viability of DVDs.

Reuters reported in January that the Justice Department is investigating the industry's decision not to endorse new "Blu-ray" technology in DVD players, which would increase disc storage space from 4.7 gigabytes up to 36-50 gigabytes.

Technology concerns are not the only deterrent to the DVD market.

While many studios and companies have rushed to release features in DVD format, many have yet to make the transition, due to rights-holders blocking re-release without substantial increases in fees.

Certain versions of films will go out of print due to rights disputes. This leads to sky-rocketing retail and online auction prices of films.

In other instances, studios will hold back releases for re-enhancements.

Last year's release of "The Lion King" had significant additions included in the DVD set, and Disney is slated to do it again when it releases a Platinum Edition of "Aladdin."

Yahoo! News reported 20 percent of the artwork for the film has been enhanced with re-drawing or background touch-ups.

Not all consumers are pleased by studios' efforts to revamp their features for DVD release. Alterations made to "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial" upset fans who liked the original film, pressuring DVD-makers to include the original and revised versions on the special edition release.

Fans of the original "Star Wars" trilogy will face a similar fate. The New York Post reported that the epic trilogy will be released Sept. 21 in the "Special Edition" versions released by George Lucas.

While new technologies are inevitable, the advent of DVDs has re-sparked the home entertainment industry.

IN BRIEF

The Associated Press

Colin Farrell recovering from foot injury

Farrell

Irish actor Colin Farrell injured his foot when he slipped and fell on the stairway in a Bangkok hotel over the weekend, reported Farrell's publicist, who also said the actor is recovering.

Farrell was in Thailand to shoot Oliver Stone's epic "Alexander." Farrell will play the title role of the conqueror of the ancient world.

Also starring in the movie are Jared Leto, Anthony Hopkins and Angelina Jolie. The film is set for a Nov. 5 release.

His is the second injury on the movie's set. In December, it was reported that Farrell injured a co-star when he accidentally slashed the man's stomach while filming a battle scene.

Kidman denies rumors that she has cancer

Kidman

Nicole Kidman this week denied tabloid rumors that she's battling breast cancer.

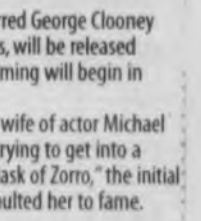
In a press release, Kidman revealed she had gone to her doctor for a routine checkup, received testing and was given a clean bill of health.

An unnamed tabloid, however, reported otherwise.

Moviegoers were handed a surprise, however, when the actress wasn't nominated for Best Actress in last year's Civil War drama "Cold Mountain." Kidman's next project is a political thriller, "The Interpreter." She plays alongside Sean Penn, who this year garnered a Best Actor nomination for his work in "Mystic River."

Arrest warrant issued for Courtney Love

Love



A Beverly Hills judge issued an arrest warrant Wednesday for rocker Courtney Love after she missed a court hearing on two felony counts of drug possession.

The charges could push back publicity for her first album in six years, "America's Sweetheart."

In addition, it has further jeopardized her chances to maintain custody of her 11-year-old daughter. Love's mother-in-law is trying to gain custody of the child.

Love is the widow of Nirvana frontman Kurt Cobain, who committed suicide in April 1994.

Zeta-Jones to act in 'Ocean's Eleven' sequel

Zeta-Jones

Actress Catherine Zeta-Jones has signed on to act in the upcoming sequel to the 2001 film "Ocean's Eleven," at the behest of the film's director, Steven Soderbergh.

The sequel to the crime caper, which starred George Clooney and Julia Roberts, will be released next year, and filming will begin in April.

Zeta-Jones, wife of actor Michael Douglas, also is trying to get into a sequel to "The Mask of Zorro," the initial movie that catapulted her to fame.

Local songwriter weaves college memories, emotions into lyrics

By Audrey Young
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College defined. Road trips and new friends. Moral struggles and soul-seeking. Hearts connecting and hearts breaking.

Jared "Pete" Gile, a local singer/songwriter, weaves these college memoirs and many more into the lyrics of his music. His debut CD, "Modern Day Mountain Man," contains 15 self-written songs.

"I'm a songwriter who happens to sing – not a singer who happens to write songs," said Gile, a 2002 K-State graduate from Scandia, Kan. "Writing is therapy for me. Just to write my feelings sometimes can be a tremendous release.

Gile said he writes what he feels and doesn't tailor his music to any one group.

Casey Richard, senior in milling science and management, said he appreciates that Gile writes his own tracks.

"It means more to me as a listener that he actually writes the songs and puts his own feelings in them instead of someone else's," Richard said.

Gile's song, "Back 40 Lover," contains the line "working alongside your family might be the best part of all."

Courtesy art

"Because I was raised on a family farm, that line has real meaning for me," Richard said.

Gile performs his own music, as well as cover songs, at many gigs in Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Nebraska and Missouri. Richard said he and his friends listen to Gile's music in many different settings.

"We pop in his CD when we are sitting around playing cards. But it's even better to hear him live," Richard said.

"I've seen two completely different spectrums. One Sunday night at Chance, the atmosphere was laid-back and mellow," Richard said. "Complete opposite of that was a night at Fat's with people partying, hollering and dancing around. I guess most of his shows are somewhere in between, because we like to hear his songs, but also to have a good time."

Gile said there are many different styles of music on his CD, and it is hard to lump them into one genre.

"I would call it alternative country or Americana. It's pretty loose anymore as to what people call music. I like to leave it up to the crowd to decide," Gile said.

Whatever the classification, he joins a growing movement centered on a group of musicians in Texas and Oklahoma.

The market for this red-dirt music is growing rapidly in Kansas.

Matt Church, owner of Shotz, said Gile has loyal fans and draws a good crowd.

"Pete's music is like storytelling. His fans understand and relate to what he is singing," Church said.

Gile recently added a band to his solo acoustic act.

The Pete Gile Band includes Gile as lead vocalist; Adam Alexander, lead guitar and harmony vocals; Alex Theisen, drums and percussion; Howard Reed, keyboard; and Nick Jefferson, bass.

The band's Manhattan debut will be 9 p.m. Feb. 27 at Bobby T's Bar & Deli.

"It was hard finding people who were dedicated to the music and were good, too," Gile said. "I'm really digging the sound we have, and looking forward to our debut."

The band will focus on getting the CD to the Texas and Oklahoma markets for the next couple of years, Gile said. After that, he hopes to record another album.

"Right now, I'm just enjoying what I'm doing," Gile said. "I love having a crowd that actually listens and knows the words to my music rather than having me just be background noise for them to get drunk to.

"When the audience is connecting to and digging my music, that's what makes me the happiest."

Wildcats dominate ISU by forcing turnovers, consistent team effort

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With patience and poise, K-State dominated the Iowa State Cyclones in a 90-59 drubbing Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats (11-9, 3-6) used man-to-man defense to cause turnovers and steals and frustrate the Cyclones (13-7, 4-5).

"We had a lot of players make a lot of plays," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "It was a good effort."

K-State got the jump on the Cyclones by rattling off the first nine points of the game before Iowa State managed a basket.

The Wildcats already had a 10-point lead in the first five minutes, and would eventually push the lead to 22 points, 47-25, at the end of the first half.

Senior guards Jarrett Hart and Tim Ellis each had 13 points in the first half to lead the Wildcats.

Both were perfect from beyond the 3-point line, shooting a combined 3-for-3.

"Coach told us to play as hard as we can and just go play ball," Hart said.

While showing patience on offense, the Wildcats were able to get good shot selection and shot 55 percent from the field.

On the defensive side of the ball, K-State blanketed every Iowa State shooter and held them to 37 percent from the field.

"Everyone looked poised tonight, and everyone knew their role," Hart said.

Between Ellis and Hart, Iowa State's talented backcourt senior Jake Sullivan and freshmen Curtis Stinson and Will Blalock were held to 11-for-36 from the field combined.

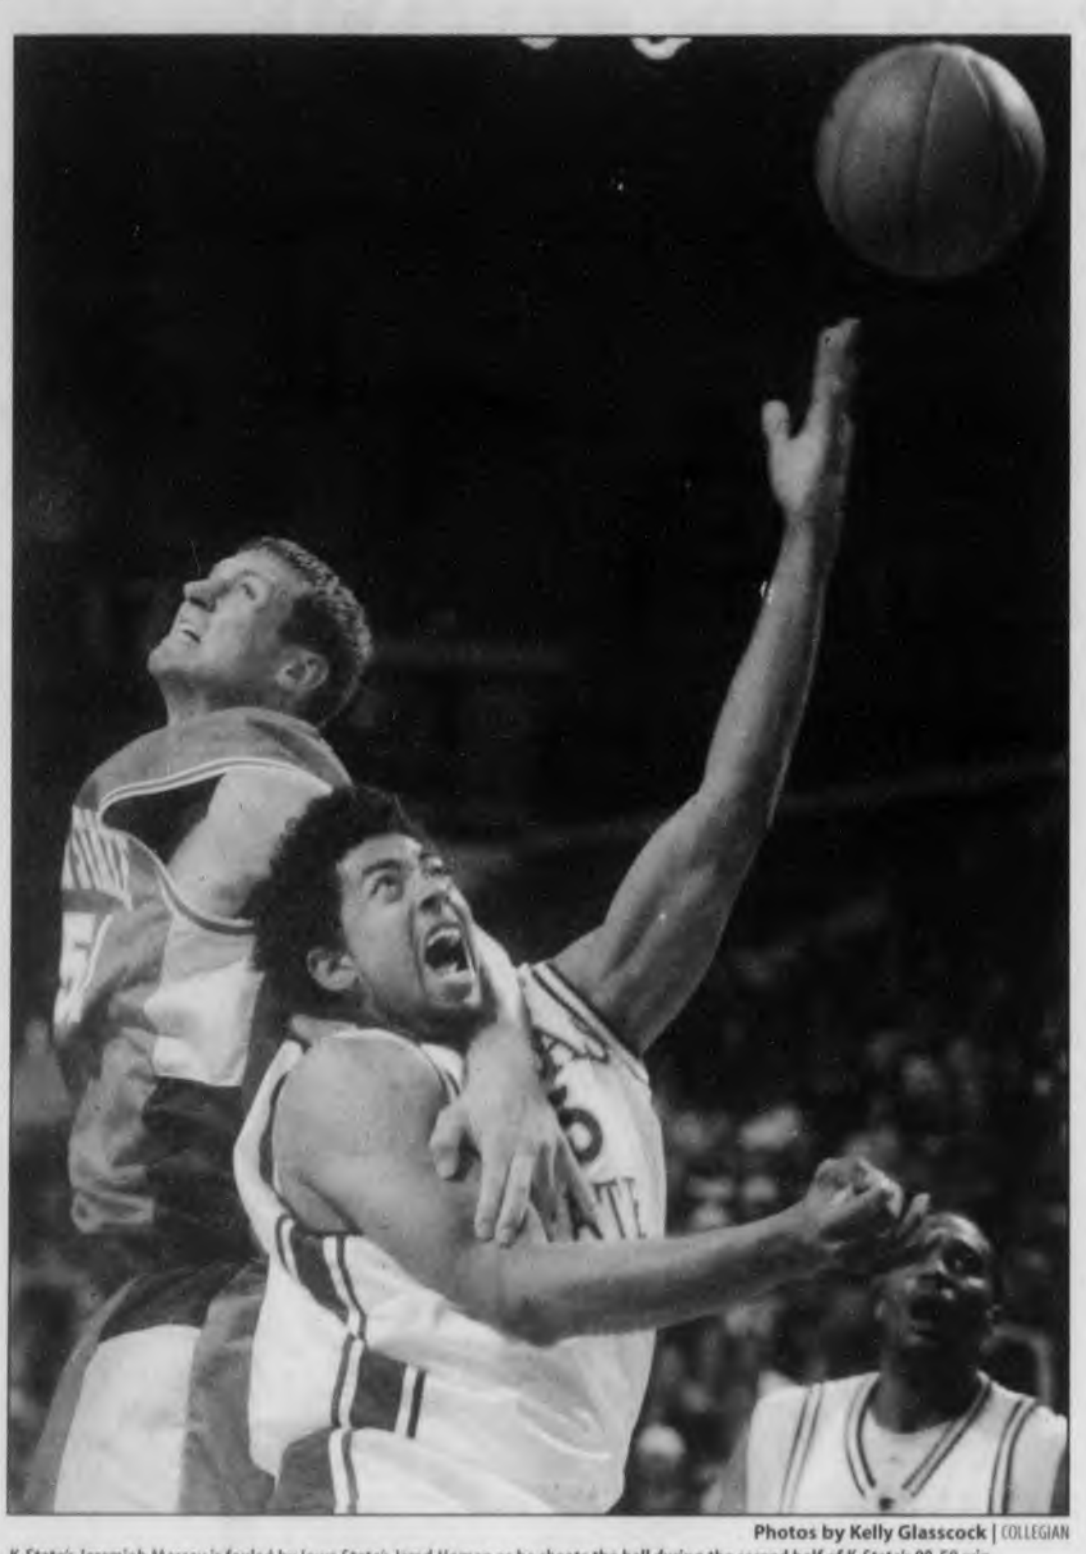
Although junior forward Jeremiah Massey had been on a tear as of late, averaging 22.5 points during the last two games, he only played eight minutes in the first half, but registered six points.

Picking up the the slack in the first half was sophomore forward Marques Hayden, who nabbed eight rebounds and was a catalyst for the Wildcats' transition game.

"He was a workhorse for us," Wooldridge said.

"He had a really good game."

In the second half, the Wildcats picked up where they left off.



Sparked by Massey and Hayden, K-State eclipsed the 30-point margin and were in control the entire game.

Massey and Hayden would go on to each post a double-double with 20 points and 12 rebounds and 10 points and 13 rebounds, respectively.

The Cyclones, who average 38 percent on 3-pointers were held to 1-for-11 from behind the 3-point line for the game.

The only bright spot for the Cyclones was senior forward Jackson Vroman, who scored 16 points and

K-State guards dominate Cyclones

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Before its game against K-State, Iowa State appeared to have one of the most complete backcourts in the league.

Cyclone senior guard Jake Sullivan leads the Big 12 in 3-pointers per game.

Freshman guard Will Blalock was named Sporting News National Player of the Week earlier in the month. The team's leading scorer, Curtis Stinson, is widely considered the best of the conference's freshman class.

Wednesday night, they were completely dominated.

Led by seniors Tim Ellis and Jarrett Hart, Wildcat guards more than held their own, as K-State thrashed the Cyclones 90-59 in Bramlage Coliseum.

"We just went out there and played ball," Hart said.

Hart scored 21 points and Ellis added 18, combining to shoot a red-hot 75 percent from the field.

"It's our gym," said Ellis of his and Hart's shooting display. "It's like a routine for us."

Ellis and Hart were also a near-perfect 5-of-6 from 3-point land.

However good the Wildcat guards were on offense, their defensive performance might have been even better.

Iowa State's backcourt struggled all night to find open looks against the K-State defense.

"We knew going in that we couldn't have any separation on Sullivan, and with Stinson and Blalock, we needed to guard against penetration," Ellis said.

Mission accomplished.

The Cyclones – fourth in the Big 12 in 3-point shooting percentage coming into the game – shot a dismal 1-of-11 from outside the arc.

Overall, the trio of Sullivan, Blalock and Stinson hit just 11-of-36 shots from the field.

Coach Jim Wooldridge was impressed with the defensive effort, especially in a first half that saw the Wildcats jump to a 47-25 advantage.

"I thought in the first half we really team-guarded them and made it hard for them to get to the basket," Wooldridge said.

He also was pleased with the pressure put on Sullivan – the Cyclones' all-time leading 3-point shooter.

"I thought Tim and Jarrett both did a great job on him," Wooldridge said. "That's a blue-collar thing. Normally, you don't get recognized for that kind of effort."

The K-State senior duo was not alone in contributing to the excellent guard-play.

Freshman guard Dez Willingham added nine points and led the Wildcats with six assists.

Willingham dished out an assist on each of the team's first three buckets, contributing to a 9-0 Wildcat run to begin the game.

"He got us off to a good start," Wooldridge said.

Now, K-State looks to Saturday's trip to Lubbock, Texas to face the Texas Tech Red Raiders and their All-America candidate guard Andre Emmett.

Ellis is ready for the challenge.

"Oh yeah, I'll take it," said Ellis of possibly being matched up with Emmett. "Whoever Coach puts me on, I'm coming at him."

Wildcats continue winning streak with 30-point triumph over Jayhawks

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kendra Wecker's parents were there. So were Nicole Ohlde's. Pat Bosco was there, too.

There was even a makeshift Willie the Wildcat for "K-S-U Wildcats" duties.

The scoreboard in Allen Fieldhouse had No. 9 K-State (18-3, 9-1) as the guests in Wednesday night's game against KU (9-12, 2-8), but it was indeed more a home game for the Cats as about 4,000 fans (total attendance was 4,564) made the journey to Lawrence to see a K-State victory, 81-51.

"It is just a huge rush and a huge confidence booster to know our fans are going to drive an hour-and-a-half down the road and for some people even more and support us here in Lawrence on a weeknight," junior guard Laurie Koehn said.

"It's huge for us to know they're going to be here and seeing them in the stands chanting K-State cheers. It's an awesome feeling and we really appreciate what they do for us."

The Wildcats never trailed in the game, jumping to an early lead as they shot a blistering 57.1 percent from the field in the first half, securing a 14-point lead at halftime.

Brie Madden and Claire Coggins helped lead the way.

"A big difference for us was the play off the bench from Brie and Claire," junior guard Megan Mahoney said.

Ohlde who was guarded man-to-man for the majority of the game, led all scorers with 23 points. Wecker chipped in 21 points.

"We just got a lot of good looks and people were setting us up pretty well," Ohlde said. "It was just kind of what the defense was giving us, and you just roll with that. The lane was pretty open, and we were able to make some easy moves and read the defense."

Bench-scoring once again proved vital for the Cats.

K-State had the edge in bench production, 23-14. Junior forward Madden and freshman guard Coggins led that charge with 14 and 8 points, respectively.

Madden said Coach Deb Patterson made a concerted effort to improve the team's post play.

"The last couple of games I haven't done offensively like I'm capable of doing," Madden said, "and I wasn't very happy with what I was bringing to the court. Coach P. really worked with us in the post this week, and it was a confidence booster and that helped a lot."

This was K-State's sixth consecutive victory in the Sunflower Showdown.

KU has now lost three straight games and is 0-4 in games played on Wednesday nights.

Next action for the K-State will be Saturday's rematch against the Nebraska Cornhuskers. Tipoff is set for 2 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum. Tickets are available by calling (800) 221-CATS.

"You've got to play true to who you are and bring your best every night out," Patterson said.

"I know it sounds like a cliché but it's not a cliché, it's a demand, and it's a challenge in the rigors of a league like this."

Soccer | USA loses to Mexico, out of Olympics

The roster of U.S. athletes going to the Summer Olympics is growing steadily smaller.

A swarming Mexican offense knocked the U.S. soccer team out Tuesday night with a 4-0 victory that ended a string of five appearances for the Americans in the Games.

Playing before a noisy crowd of almost 57,000, Mexico avenged a 2-0 World Cup loss two years ago and joined Costa Rica in the Olympic field.

The Mexicans battered the U.S. defense with waves of attackers who kept slipping free of defenders near the goal. Rafael Marquez Lugo scored twice for Mexico.

The game was a winner-take-all battle for a berth at the Summer Olympics. It came just over two months after a qualifying tournament victory by Mexico kept the U.S. baseball team out of the Games.

CBB | Knight's Bloomington house put up for auction

Knight

A 4,660-square-foot home once belonging to former Indiana men's basketball coach Bob Knight, has been put up for auction on the Internet.

The home, spread across nearly five acres of secluded land in Bloomington, features five walk-in closets, a 546-square-foot study, skylights and a nearly 300 square-foot master bathroom equipped with a "jetted tub" and steam room for two.

A posting on the Internet auction site eBay seeks $397,500 for the home, or more than three times the median value of a home in Bloomington.

The Jan. 23 posting on eBay makes no secret of the home's famous previous owner: "Rare opportunity to live in the house 'The General' lived in for his last 16 years while he was the Basketball Coach of Indiana University."

MLB | City council approves more night games for Cubs

The Cubs will be allowed to increase their night games at Wrigley Field from 18 to 30 per season by 2006 under an ordinance approved Wednesday by the Chicago City Council.

The limit will increase to 22 this year, 26 in 2005 and 30 in 2006 under the ordinance, approved by a 42-0 vote.

The plan also includes provisions requiring the Cubs to spend more money to address congestion, litter and other game-related problems in the residential neighborhood that surrounds the ballpark, which opened in 1914.

The Cubs are the last major league team to play the majority of their 81 home games in the afternoon. Lights weren't added to Wrigley Field until 1988.

CFB | Buffs hired strippers, adult company confirms

Already mired in a scandal that includes allegations of rape, the University of Colorado suffered another blow Tuesday when an adult entertainment company confirmed football players hired strippers for recruiting parties as recently as two weeks ago.

Steve Lower, president of Hardbodies Entertainment Inc. in Denver, said athletes at Colorado and universities around the country have been paying strippers to entertain recruits for years.

"It's a tradition, like throwing a bachelor party," he said. "It's a tradition handed down from player to player to player."

The news couldn't have come at a worse time for Colorado, which was plunged into scandal last week with the disclosure of allegations that it uses sex and women to entice recruits.

University officials have denied the school uses sex parties as a recruiting tool. Last week, Barnett suspended four players, including one for taking a recruit to a strip club.

COACH | Hill increases intensity on baseball field before 1st season

and had a good sense of the game of baseball."

There was only one problem – Weiser had never seen Hill coach.

As a result, Weiser, along with other K-State athletics officials, traveled to Alabama last year to watch Hill's Central Missouri State team play in the NCAA Division II College World Series.

Weiser said by the game's fourth inning, he knew Hill was exactly what K-State needed.

A month later, Hill walked away as the winningest active Division II coach in the nation, and the winner of a national championship to become the coach for K-State baseball, a team with a record of 15-37.

BEHIND THE DECISION

A native Kansan, Hill and his family moved from Missouri back to Kansas last summer – all for the chance to turn around a struggling Division I program.

"I personally thought this was a great opportunity that I found here to build a successful program," Hill said. "There's a lot of support from the athletic administration, and it was across the board. It was not only baseball, but all sports."

The decision to become a Division I baseball coach, Hill said, was not a hard one to make.

"We had great ball players and a great program," he said. "But during the interview process, everything felt so right."

THE ADJUSTMENT

The transition from Division II to Division I baseball has been smooth, Hill said.

"Really the transition was not so much from the teaching standpoint," he said. "It's really different recruiting. It's much more intense."

But Hill hasn't been the only one making adjustments.

Instead of their usual afternoon practices, players found themselves getting up at 5:30 a.m. this fall to run the stairs in Bramlage Coliseum.

Justin Rethorst, baseball trainer, said by fall's end, many players had memorized the number of stairs they ran each morning.

Even Hill said he admitted to the fall season's intensity.

"We challenged the kids, and they didn't back down from it," he said. "These kids are hungry to win. They want to start a winning tradition here."

And by the end of the fall season, it appeared it was worth it.

"Now we're concerned with the basics – the chemistry and playing hard," he said. "The foundation is with those things. You establish those things, and then the wins and losses take care of themselves."

Returning senior pitcher Brett Bagley said the change he's seen is the aggressiveness with the team.

"We really get out and get after it," Bagley said. "Last year, we were a little more relaxed. Coach Hill has that intensity."

FUTURE OUTLOOK

The hopes of hosting an NCAA regional tournament and making it to the World Series are near, but for now, it's about starting a winning tradition of K-State baseball.

"I don't look at this as a sprint," Weiser said. "This is a marathon."

And Hill, Weiser said, is the man to do it.

"When he inherited that program at Central Missouri, they had a tradition of success," he said. "But he surprised everyone by winning a national championship."

As for Hill, his goal is to establish a successful team.

"I like teaching and to see young people develop – not only on the baseball field," he said.

His players are just excited to be a part of the new era of K-State baseball.

"Everybody's excited," Bagley said. "Last year we were beat on pretty good, but this year it's almost like that never happened."

CARS | Vehicle burglaries common; locking doors is key to prevention

"Some people kind of live in their cars and leave a lot of their stuff in there, but my advice is, if you would mind losing it, don't leave it in your car."

Cars are a little safer on campus, but burglaries still happen, with three being reported to the K-State Police Department since Jan. 1

"It comes and goes in rashes," Lt. Troy Lane, K-State Police, said. "We'll have times when we'll have several in a course of a few days or weeks, and then it will stop for a while."

Lane said the most common places for burglaries to occur are in the north parking lots near the residence halls, because they are for long-term parking. He said other problem areas are the lot off of Kimball Avenue across from the football offices and the McCain parking lot, which is across from Aggieville.

"Someone is walking home, has had too much to drink and is not thinking straight. They'll see something they want and take it," he said.

Lane said criminals who burglarize cars often are not difficult to catch because the stolen merchandise isn't easy to unload without getting caught.

"It's the ones who hit one or two cars here or there that can be hard to find," he said.

Lane suggested students don't decorate their cars with stickers that advertise a stereo system, such as Alpine or Kicker.

He said it's unbelievable how many students leave their cars unlocked.

"That's where we see the most theft," he said. "If you've left something in your car and locked it, you should still get it out of view. Most burglaries are crimes of opportunity.

"They walk by and see something too good to pass up and take it."

SETH CHILD | Panera, Capitol Federal bank to join shopping center

"Manhattan is a good community," he said. "Its citizens are very highly educated and have an income that is above average as well."

Babich said the new location, slated to open in July, would be the "cutting-edge store" in the chain and contain such amenities as a fire place.

Capitol Federal representatives confirmed the company's plans to locate a branch in the development, but were unable to comment any further.

While Panera and Capitol Federal have been confirmed, there are still other undeveloped areas.

"There are several building sites up there to be developed with retail, office and restaurants," Butler said.

He said the developer, Bo Konrad of Kansas City, had other businesses committed to locating at the site, but Konrad had not told Butler what those businesses were.

Konrad was unavailable for comment.

Butler said another retail tenant had been secured, but he was not aware of who that tenant was.

Jerome Hess, owner of Manhattan Floral, located in Seth Child Commons, said he was told there was a major retailer going in the location as well.

had 11 rebounds for his fifth double-double of the season.

Along with Massey and Hayden, Hart scored 21 points and Ellis had 18.

When asked about getting a win after the last-second loss to Colorado, Wooldridge said his team stayed together.

"Our team has proven all year long that they have the ability to bounce back, and there are no signs that this team is breaking," Wooldridge said.

"They want to win for the team."

Valentine's Day celebrations not just for couples; singles battle sadness with quality time with friends

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With advertisements featuring couples in love all over television, magazines and Internet, one wonders what is left for singles on the day of love.

Some single K-State students already are making plans to spend the holiday weekend with other single friends.

"I'm going to hang out with my single friends, and then we're all going to go to the bars and find the single guys," Holly Kesse, senior in bakery science, said.

"I'm going to get extremely trashed with some of my girlfriends and bitch and moan about couples," Jennifer Hotchkiss, senior in political science, said.

However, alcohol isn't an automatic factor in singles' celebrations of the holiday.

"I will be going to dinner and the movies with other single friends," Trent Smith, senior in anthropology, said.

Valentine's Day can put a lot of stress on singles.

People feel like they cannot participate in the holiday because they are not in a relationship, they just ended a relationship or it has gone sour, said Aaron Carlstrom, counselor at University Counseling Services.

Singles feel excluded from friends because they do not fit what the holiday tradition says they should celebrate.

Part of the reason singles feel alienated is because society has put so much emphasis on having a significant other to celebrate Valentine's Day.

"Romance and love are a part of human life," Carlstrom said. "Societies acknowledge those aspects of human life."

However, Carlstrom said people can get too caught up in the small things of Valentine's Day.

They can focus too much on getting the "perfect Valentine's Day card or the perfect flowers. It leads to stress."

There are alternate ways to celebrate the holiday, Carlstrom said.

Valentine's Day doesn't have to be spent with a significant other.

Spending the day in the company of good friends, single or not, is a great way to spend the holiday, and it doesn't add the extra pressure of molding the day toward love and romance.

Proper celebration of the holiday is a personal choice, Carlstrom said.

"Find what's healthy for you," Carlstrom said. "For some people, it may be healthy for them to spend it alone.

"It depends on what's going on with the person."

Valentine's Day is also a way to express appreciation and gratitude for your friends, he said.

It's a way for a group of friends to bond and celebrate each other and their friendships.

The holiday is very profitable, and it probably will remain so for years to come, Carlstrom said.

"Valentine's Day provides the moment where you pay more attention to love and romance," he said.

Fast facts
Valentine's Day

- There are an estimated one billion Valentine's Day cards sent each year, making Valentine's Day the second-largest card-sending holiday of the year (The first is Christmas).
- About 85 percent of all valentines are purchased by women.
- In addition to the United States, Valentine's Day is celebrated in Canada, Mexico, the United Kingdom, France and Australia.
- The first mass-produced valentines sold in America were created in the 1840s.

Senators pass bill opposing Sebelius' budget

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate passed a bill opposing Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' budget recommendations at their meeting Thursday night.

The governor's State of the State Address in January called for a 3-percent faculty salary increase, but her plan would cover only half of the proposal.

"This leaves the students the responsibility to come up with about $2.5 million," Student Body President John O'Hara said.

To make up the deficit, $275,000 will be cut from student housing and $55,000 from student health services.

O'Hara said the proposal is something he feels very passionate about and has been frustrated with for weeks.

"Allowing the governor to redistribute our money to the state budget is a dangerous precedent to set. This is the first time the state has proposed dipping into our student privilege fees, and we should not let it occur," O'Hara said.

U.S. soldier charged with aiding al-Qaeda

By Rebecca Cook
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT LEWIS, Wash. – A National Guardsman was arrested Thursday and charged by the Army with trying to provide information to the al-Qaeda terrorist network, the military said.

Army Lt. Col. Stephen Barger confirmed that Spc. Ryan G. Anderson was charged with aiding the enemy by wrongfully attempting to communicate and give intelligence to al-Qaeda. Anderson, 26, is being held at Fort Lewis, an Army base near Tacoma.

Barger declined to give any details on the arrest, including what information allegedly was given to al-Qaeda or how it was provided.

Anderson converted to Islam five years ago, and studied military history with an emphasis on the Middle East while attending Washington State University, the Everett Herald reported last week.

Anderson is a tank crew member from the National Guard's 81st Armor Brigade, a 4,000-member unit set to depart for Iraq for a one-year deployment. It is the biggest deployment for the Washington Army National Guard since World War II.

The brigade has been training at Fort Lewis since November. Eighty percent of the soldiers – 3,200 – are from Washington state, and 1,000 are from guard units in California and Minnesota.

It includes two tank battalions, a mechanized infantry battalion, engineers, support troops, artillery and an intelligence company.

Washington State University spokeswoman Charleen Taylor said Anderson was a 2002 graduate with a degree in history. He graduated from Everett's Cascade High School in 1995.

New York Times reporter says everyone discriminates others

By Scott A. Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Racism, stereotypes and all forms of discrimination are not limited to white people oppressing black people.

The problem is much more complicated.

"Perception is a reality and racial misunderstanding is mutual," said Lena Williams, New York Times reporter and author.

Williams delivered a message of acceptance and understanding to onlookers at the Black History Month Keynote sponsored by the Black Student Union in the Union Ballroom.

"Racism, ageism, sexism, homophobism, xenophobism – if you live long enough, one of the 'isms is going to get you," she said.

Williams said that while black people have been discriminated against for hundreds of years, they too are guilty of making race-based decisions.

"Behind closed doors, black folks were saying the same kinds of things about white folks," she said.

Williams said all of society – black, white or otherwise – is guilty of false presumptions.

She spoke of examples of blacks refusing to give way to whites on sidewalks, in reference to Jim Crow laws of the past that required blacks to step aside to allow whites to pass.

Some blacks, she said, feel insulted when white people call them by their first names, since for many years, terms like "mister" or "misses" were reserved only for whites.

"Im guilty of it, too," she said. "In the wake of 9/11, I have found myself doing to Arab-Americans what whites have done to my people."

Williams said the only way to avoid such stereotypes is to increase understanding of different races.

"How many of you have a good friend that is of another race?" she said.

She said there is no way to truly understand the intimate details of another people when we haven't eaten with them and spoke with them and spent

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | GOT V-D?

Has Cupid drawn back his bow and struck you with an arrow? Whether it's in your heart or it feels like you're getting kicked in the groin, Saturday is the one day where no matter what romantic thing you do, someone else has something better. Enjoy.

2 | PHUK LUV

The band Phuk Luv will perform at the Granada in Lawrence, but closer to home, Shotz will be offering fun for singles on a couples' holiday. The first 50 single ladies will get a free gift, and there might be a single guy or two to sympathize.

3 | SWEET REVENGE

The women's basketball team looks to prove itself and give Nebraska a taste of its own medicine. The Cornhuskers stunned the Wildcats in Lincoln during the teams' last meeting, handing K-State its only conference loss this season. The game is at 2 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum. Come help keep the red out.

4 | GIVE A DAMN

The ultimate tale of romance, intrigue, passion and now-cliched lines will be playing all weekend in the K-State Student Union. "Gone With the Wind" will play at 7 p.m. tonight and Saturday and 8 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $1.

5 | RIDE 'EM COWBOY

A memorial bull ride is at 7 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena in memory of the late Brett Cushenbery, a K-State student who died from injuries sustained at a rodeo last year. Admission is $5 for adults and students, and all proceeds will go to helping the family pay funeral costs. See Page 10 for the full story.

6 | DELTA TOM

"The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" floats up the mighty Mississippi, hangs a left on the Missouri, and ... well, it ends up in Manhattan. The show will be at 7 p.m. Saturday at McCain Auditorium. See Page 10 for the full story on the play.

HOW TO
Pick out good flowers

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With Valentine's Day on Saturday, here are some helpful tips about choosing the best flowers for that special someone.

COLORS

Since the majority of flower recipients are women, the most popular color of flowers is red.

"Men see red as the color of love," Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral, said.

Other colors appropriate for Valentine's Day include white, yellow, peach and purple. Just make sure you avoid colors that speak of death – black or withered flowers. Those colors are guaranteed to make your relationship dry up more quickly than snow in June.

TYPES

Traditionally, roses have been the flower of love.

Tulips, daffodils and irises are popular expressions of love on Valentine's Day. Remember to choose fresh flowers rather than silk ones, because even though they don't last, fresh flowers emphasize the genuine feelings of love.

ARRANGEMENTS

The traditional dozen red roses are still popular for Valentine's Day, but there are other options as well. You can spice up any arrangement by adding balloons, candy or small stuffed animals.

Don't be afraid to ask the sales people for help.

If you run out of ideas, remember you can never go wrong with 12 gorgeous red roses.

U.N. inspectors discover weapons drawings in Iraq

By George Jahn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria – U.N. inspectors sifting through Iran's nuclear files have discovered drawings of high-tech equipment that can be used to make weapons-grade uranium – a new link to the black market headed by the father of Pakistan's atomic bomb, diplomats said Thursday.

Beyond adding another piece to the puzzle of who provided what in the clandestine supply chain headed by Abdul Qadeer Khan, the revelations cast fresh doubt on Iran's commitment to dispelling suspicions it is trying to make atomic arms.

But Iran insisted Thursday that it was cooperating.

The diplomats, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the designs were of a P-2 centrifuge – more advanced than the P-1 model Iran has acknowledged using to enrich uranium for what it says are peaceful purposes.

They said preliminary investigations by inspectors working for the International Atomic Energy Agency indicated they matched drawings of equipment found in Libya and supplied by Khan's network.

While highly enriched uranium is a key component of some nuclear warheads, less enriched uranium can be used to generate power, which is what Iran says it was interested in.

The diplomats said Iran did not volunteer the designs – despite pledging last year to replace nearly two decades of secrecy with full openness about all aspects of its nuclear activities. Instead, they said, IAEA inspectors had to dig for them.

"Coming up with them is an example of real good inspector work," one of the diplomats told The Associated Press.

"They took information and put it together and put something in front of them that they can't deny."

The diplomats said Iran had not yet formally explained why the advanced centrifuge designs were not voluntarily handed over to the agency.

Still, the diplomats emphasized that – despite putting into question Iran's pledge to be fully open – the find did not advance suspicions that Tehran was trying to make nuclear weapons.

The United States and others accuse Iran of having nuclear weapons ambitions. Iran agreed to end nearly two decades of nuclear secrecy late last year but only under intense international pressure generated by the discovery of its enrichment program.

"We're not convinced Iran has come completely clean," Under Secretary of State John R. Bolton told a security conference in Berlin.

"There is no doubt in our minds that Iran continues to pursue nuclear weapons. They have not complied even with the commitment they made in October."

In Rome, Iranian Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi denied Tehran had any nuclear weapons ambitions.

"We do not have anything to hide and we are ready to be inspected more (seriously) by IAEA inspectors," Kharrazi told reporters on the sidelines of a conference celebrating 50 years of Vatican-Iranian relations.

"There may be questions by IAEA inspectors but we are ready to verify those, and what has been achieved altogether up until now is out of our cooperation with IAEA," Kharrazi said in English when asked about the discovery of the drawings.

"As long as we are ready to continue our cooperation, all outstanding questions will be verified."

But the Vatican issued a stern message on nuclear weapons during Kharrazi's visit, with Pope John Paul II urging Tehran to continue cooperating with U.N. inspectors and his foreign minister warning that the pursuit of such weapons only multiplies conflicts.

On Wednesday, President Bush acknowledged loopholes in the international enforcement system and urged the United Nations and member states to draft criminal penalties for nuclear trafficking.

Human embryo cloning spurs debate

By Paul Recer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE – In a clash of politics and science, the first successful cloning of a human embryo – and the extraction of stem cells from it – has ignited new calls for a ban on all forms of human cloning in the United States.

The cloning announcement by South Korean scientists on Thursday prompted members of Congress and church leaders to ask for immediate legislation.

"Cloning human beings is wrong. It is unethical to tinker with human life," said Rep. Joe Pitts, R-Pa.

A ban must be passed, he said, "before this unethical science comes to our shores."

The Bush administration favors such action and referred reporters to a statement by the president calling for "a comprehensive and effective ban."

"Human life is a creation, not a commodity, and should not be used as research material for reckless experiments," Bush said last month.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who voted against a bill passed last year by the House that called for a ban on human cloning, said there needs to be legislation that would prevent cloning of babies, but permit "lifesaving stem cell research to proceed under strict ethical guidelines."

Two South Korean scientist who announced the landmark achievement here Thursday said they have already been the target of street demonstrations and egg-throwing incidents in Seoul even though their work is directed at treating diseases and not at making cloned babies.

Woo Suk Hwang, lead author of the study, admitted at a news conference that the technique developed in his lab "cannot be separated from reproductive cloning" and called on every country to prevent the use of the technology in that way.

He said the work was controlled and regulated by the Korea Stem Cell Research Center "to prevent the remote possibility of any uncontrolled accidents such as human reproductive cloning."

Shin Yong Moon, a co-author of the study, said the work must continue because of its great promise for treating of diseases such as Parkinson's, Alzheimer's, spinal cord injury and diabetes.

But he said a new law passed in Korea will now require his group to get a government license before proceeding with their research.

The medical use of stem cells derived from cloning will require at least another decade of research, he said.

Potholes can cause car alignment problems

By Bailey Basinger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You can swerve, but you can't miss. It's the roadway parasite commonly known as the pothole.

In Manhattan, crews are working diligently to remedy the rough situation.

Chuck Williams, director of public works for the city of Manhattan, knows potholes are a problem for residents. He said city crews are constantly repairing the holes caused by the winter weather.

"A significant portion of the problem is weather-related," Williams said. "Potholes are created by a process known as the freeze-thaw cycle."

This process occurs when moisture seeps inside previously existing cracks in the streets. Overnight, temperatures drop, causing the moisture to freeze and expand. The next day, the ice melts again and contracts. After a few days under such conditions, the concrete begins eroding and a pothole forms.

Due to the cold temperatures and the possibility of more winter storms, the holes can be repaired only temporarily until a warmer season. Williams also said the temporary patch may need to be applied more than once, because it is difficult to make a patch stick in the cold conditions.

"We can deal with this issue better in the summertime, when we can apply a patch that will adhere better and last longer," Williams said.

Until then, Manhattan road crews will do their best to make sure streets are safe enough for cars to drive on.

Hitting a pothole can cause serious damage to a vehicle.

John Eichm, a mechanic at Midas Auto Service Experts, said potholes usually cause damage to a vehicle's alignment. Problems with alignment can make a car difficult to steer and make driving dangerous.

However, fixing the problem is fairly inexpensive.

"Alignment repairs typically range from $39-$69. It all just depends on how bad the damage is," Eiehm said.

In extremely bad instances, potholes can do as much as pop a tire or bend a wheel. Both problems cost a significant amount more to fix.

Manhattan has a place to report potholes on it's Web site, www.ci.manhattan.ks.us. The Web site provides an easy way for city crews to know where the problems are facing their residents.

"Ninety percent of the time, we are able to respond to the complaints in about eight hours," Williams said.

"However, during the winter, it's only the temporary patch."

TO THE POINT

Senators correct to deny group's funding for trip

Student Senate made the right decision in the face of heated debate when it denied funding for Young Democrats at its meeting Thursday.

The Senate Allocations Committee has a rule that funding requests must be turned in four weeks prior to the date of the event or conference.

Young Democrats members turned in their application six days before their national convention.

When they were denied funds, the group complained, and senators, after begin given a chance to change their votes, agreed on the same outcome.

Group members claimed senators were discriminating based on political reasons. Those accusations are unfounded and unfair.

Rules are rules. Money is tight and should be allocated only to those who show responsibility and respect.

Turning in an application more than two weeks late shows carelessness.

If the Young Democrats can't follow the rules, they don't deserve the money.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Drunk watching

Columnist's 21st birthday will be spent making fun of others

Illustrations by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

I'm finally going to be one of you.

JAMES HURLA

My 21st birthday is Monday, and I will join the ranks of binge drinkers, including Ted Kennedy, Waylon Jennings and fraternity guys everywhere – I will, however, still abstain from using roofies to get dates.

Actually, I probably won't start drinking.

Not to delight in others' misfortune, but – OK, your alcohol-induced vomiting and headaches are funny to me.

I've never been a drinker. I've never been drunk. I've only started trying drinks during the past year.

It's reassuring, by the way, to hear my friends tell me beer is an acquired taste, and then later hear them admit it always will taste like cat pee.

So heavy drinking is probably out for me, but I'll always like watching others do it.

If you've never attended a party sober, you should try it. At the very least, your chances of waking up with your wrists lashed to your ankles and a koala bear winking at you are greatly reduced.

Otherwise, it's just fun to watch other people change.

Well, except when they change into A) the angry drunk, B) the apologetic drunk, C) the overly talkative drunk or D) the I-want-to-expose-odd-parts-of-my-flesh drunk.

With those few exceptions, people are a lot of fun when they're teetering between sobriety and oblivion.

If you play your cards right, just about any party will contain a person who provides endless entertainment of pranks and stunts; another who can boost your confidence exponentially; one who can relate his entire life story in interpretive dance; and one whose sole purpose is to delight others with projectile vomiting – it's fun for all ages.

Being a jovial spirit, my favorite is the entertainer.

From botching simple card and magic tricks to jumping on the television to do the Macarena while wearing only a grass skirt, this character never ceases to amaze me.

And they're always good sports about seeing the photos.

If you're ever feeling down, go to a party and stand in the middle of the room.

Within minutes, you'll have a dozen people stumble toward you, offer a loving embrace and reassuring words like "I like you; you're a good guy," or simply, "I love you."

You can let a smile be your umbrella and booze be your antidepressant – sounds healthy, right?

The talkative drunk can quickly become your best friend, but he can become a nuisance even quicker.

Some people can talk nonstop about themselves for hours on end.

Granted, some people don't have to be drunk to do that, but alcohol certainly doesn't make them stop more quickly.

To escape, you have two options: distract them (showing shiny object, pointing to television, stabbing) or load them up with enough liquor to make them pass out.

The responsible thing, of course, is to make sure they're already seated when they pass out.

Toward the end of the night, the projectile vomiters come out.

I usually don't hang out this long, but it can prove to be delightful.

They often remain hidden until after most people have left or fallen unconscious – including themselves.

Keeping records of distance, volume and subject matter can add to the fun.

I'll be legal as of midnight Sunday, and I can hardly wait.

I'll finally be allowed into bars, where I can watch more drunken, concerted efforts to go home with someone of the opposite sex.

Students deserve credit for battling weather to get to class

It is 82 degrees outside.

In Miami.

At 7:30 a.m., a Miami student rolls out of bed and glances out the window.

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

Bright beams of sunshine permeate the window, bathing his room in warmth.

He whistles as he strolls to the shower in his boxers.

His clothing choice for the day is a T-shirt, light jacket and jeans. After dressing, he grabs breakfast and turns on the morning news.

The engine purrs, and he is confident he will be early to his 8:30 a.m. class.

Thousands of miles away, it is 15 degrees.

I also arise at 7:30 a.m. I roll out of bed and look out the window.

Greeting my tired eyes is Armageddon. Blowing snow and ice rage against my thin windowpane, making me recoil in anticipation of a horrible day.

I curse and run to the shower in the freezing air.

After a quick shower I quickly don a T-Shirt, sweater, jeans, two pairs of socks, overcoat, gloves and a ski cap.

I groggily grab a breakfast bar and switch on the television. My false sense of hope is crushed when the K-State bulletins show no cancellations.

Running outside into temperatures still in the teens, I jump into the car and start it – three times.

The engine finally sputters to life.

Resisting the urge to slit my throat with an icicle, I extract a dilapidated ice scraper.

Exiting the car, I fight to breathe while the winds whip around me.

With trembling hands, I agonizingly scrape layers of ice off of my windshield.

The battle ensues with a fight to control my vehicle on treacherous roads. The parking stalls are full, and my frustration is mounting.

Thirty minutes later, I am lugging my books to class and trying not to fall on the ice-covered sidewalks.

Stumbling into the classroom, I throw myself into an empty desk.

Exhaustion is already seeping through my bones a mere hour upon arising.

I take off my ski cap and unzip my overcoat.

Realizing the classroom is only three degrees warmer than it is outside, I put my overcoat back on and put my ski cap back on my head.

Sitting behind me is a student who walked to class and can't feel her face.

K-State students deserve credit for risking life, limb and the threat of hypothermia to attend class.

Battling the elements can make it one heck of a school day.

Manhattan has 17.4 inches of average annual snowfall. Compared to the more than 400 inches reported in parts of Montana, this appears a paltry sum.

But our weather is radical.

This erratic weather results in a lacking budget and a huge mess.

While states with more consistent winter weather are totally prepared to do battle with the elements, Kansas falls short.

Some roads and sidewalks have barely been touched a week after the storm.

A mere four days before the winter storm that closed school for the second time in a billion years, temperatures were in the 60s.

Students were walking to classes in windbreakers and jogging outside.

Within a week, temperatures had dropped below freezing. Sleet began raining down followed by inches of snow.

Students and faculty were forced to walk or drive to class in what appeared to be the end of the world.

Like dumping extra piles of snow into his yard.

Or stacking ice on his front porch.

But K-State students are logical, and we sucked it up and fought for our education.

Living in Kansas produces challenges, and students realize this.

But when you collapse into your desk this morning, do yourself a favor.

Take off your gloves. Regain the feeling in your hands. And pat yourself on the back for being a trooper.

4 couples' stories of finding love

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With more than 22,000 students on K-State's campus, the odds of finding a significant other are in your favor.

From the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex to Hale Library, the Derby Dining Center to the K-State Student Union, the opportunities to meet somebody are endless.

IN A CLUB

Couple: Kate Collings, junior in history, and Ryan Bloom, junior in architectural engineering.

Time together: 2 years, 4 months.

How they met: He was a member of the men's rowing club, and she was a coxswain, in his boat. Collings said it was Bloom's physique that she first noticed.

"Ryan was in the back of the boat with his shirt off, and he was all muscley," Collings said.

"I sat and stared at him for half of practice."

Bloom said he noticed Collings noticing him.

"I'd look over and be like 'She's checking me out,' and then I'd screw up rowing," Bloom said.

It took three weeks of teasing and overt flirting before anything happened between the couple.

After practice one night, Collings and a friend were grabbing dinner at Derby when they noticed Bloom and his friend doing the same.

The girls invited them up to Colling's room to eat with them, and it wasn't long after that Bloom and Collings were a couple.

Advantages of meeting in a club: "You have common interests," Bloom said. "And there's a smaller group of people, so there's more interaction."

Disadvantages of meeting in a club: Collings, who gave the rowing commands, said after they got together, "I couldn't get Ryan to listen to me."

Advice for those who are single: Be yourself and don't go out looking for it.

AT A PARTY

Couple: Seth Oliphant, senior in biology pre-med, and Becky Brown, senior in human ecology and mass communications.

Time together: A little over 2 years

How they met: The couple met during All-University Homecoming week at a party thrown for their homecoming team.

One of Becky's friends was talking to a friend of Seth's, and the two were introduced.

"We all just started chatting together," Brown said.

While sparks didn't immediately fly, an attraction began to build slowly.

"I just remember seeing him every night that week and always wanting to talk to him," Brown said.

The couple was hanging out at the end of the week, but after homecoming was over, Brown didn't hear from Oliphant for awhile.

"I didn't call Becky for a week," Oliphant said. "I had another date to a date party."

Luckily for both of them, his date canceled, and Oliphant asked Brown to go with him.

As part of a group dressed as Alvin and the Chipmunks and the Chipettes, the couple had their first official date.

Advantages of meeting at a party: "I think it's less pressure," Brown said, "because you're with a group, and you're more in a comfort zone because you're with your friends."

Disadvantages of meeting at a party: Though it didn't happen with him and Brown, Oliphant said one risk is "you might be too drunk to remember them."

Advice for those who are single: Don't worry about dating anybody – just have fun and see what happens.

IN THE RESIDENCE HALLS

Time together: 3 1/2 years, engaged for 1 1/2.

The couple would hang out with a group of mutual friends who would go out to eat and go to the bars together.

It was during one such trip to the bars that the couple made their first connection.

While talking about all of the hook-ups and drama going on on their floor, Area said she would never want to put herself through that.

"I made the comment 'It's too much of a soap opera. I would never date anybody on this floor, or even in this dormitory,'" Area said.

To which Hileman replied, "That's too bad, because I was thinking of asking you out."

The next day, while watching a movie with some friends, the couple made another connection.

Sitting next to each other, Area and Hileman went from just sitting there to slowly leaning toward each other to holding hands.

They had their first official date a week later at Marco Polo Ristorante and have been together ever since.

Advantages of meeting in the halls: "The convenience of being on the same floor," Hileman said. "We could hang out as much as we wanted, and it wasn't a big deal as far as driving."

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

Disadvantages of meeting in the halls: If something goes wrong, you'll have to see the other person every time you go home.

"If I hadn't hit it off with him, it probably would've been awkward," Area said.

Advice for those who are single: Use your mutual friends as resources.

It gives you an excuse to get to know them better and see what they're like before you start anything.

IN A CLASS

Couple: Don Semple and Nicole Ellis, juniors in architecture

Time together: 1 1/2 years.

How they met: Semple and Ellis had a couple of classes together the first semester of their freshman year, so they were familiar with each other.

But it wasn't until one night in studio, when Ellis was looking for something to keep her warm, that they first noticed each other.

"I was really cold and I wanted a jacket, but Don just gave me the shirt off his back," Ellis said. "He had two shirts on."

The couple continued to see each other throughout the year. They had mutual friends, and Semple was Ellis' tutor in physics.

Though not officially dating yet, the couple got more serious as summer approached.

"It was during dead week and finals week of spring semester," Ellis said. "We'd been hanging out with a bunch of our friends and spending a lot of time together."

Semple said during the summer they kept in contact and went on a couple of dates in June.

Since then, the couple has spent quite a bit of time together.

"We've had studio together the past two semesters," Semple said, "which means we spend every waking moment together."

Advantages of meeting in a class: "It's a safe setting," Ellis said. "It's not meeting some creepy guy in a bar."

Disadvantages of meeting in a class: If things don't work out, you will have to see them at least a couple of times a week until the semester is over.

Advice for those looking: Be open, honest and yourself. Be patient and understand that someone will come along.

Rebuilding baseball team faces tough competition Saturday

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a team completes a disappointing season, the cliché thing to say is that it is in the rebuilding phase or a transition process.

For the Wildcat baseball team, though, this sentiment is ringing loud and true.

Coming off of a 2003 season that saw K-State finish with an unsettling 15-37 record followed by the subsequent resignation of former coach Mike Clark, the 2004 squad truly brings in a new look.

Led by first-year coach Brad Hill, only 14 players are returning from a year ago. And to make things tougher on the new coach, the Cats will open their season in the Minute Maid College Classic at 11 a.m. today in Houston against a Houston squad that advanced to last year's NCAA Super Regionals.

On the slate for Saturday is an contest with Ohio State, a team that earned a Super Regional berth last season. The toughest test for the Cats will come at 2 p.m. Sunday when they face the defending national-champion Rice Owls. Rice enters the tournament ranked No. 1 in all polls.

Despite the monumental task ahead of him, Hill said there are benefits of opening the season against the nation's best.

"From a coaching standpoint, to go see some of the best programs in the country, and obviously Rice being the past national champion, it will be a good learning experience for me," Hill said.

The players, Hill said, are excited and aren't going there just to show up.

"Our kids are looking forward to it, we're excited, and we're going to use this as a big learning experience, but we're not going down there to make an appearance," Hill said.

"We want to go down there to get better, learn, and we won't be intimidated. That's my big thing – play hard, not be intimidated and compete against these big people."

With less than half of last year's team returning, Hill said contributions are expected from a certain trio of seniors.

"Basically, we'll start with our seniors," Hill said. "Josh Heinrich, Marc Chabot and Zack Saunders are three

Men's golf starts season

By Marshall Ice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team resumes the 2003 season Monday in Lakeland, Fla.

The Cats are competing in the Matlock Collegiate Classic at the Grasslands Golf and Country Club.

After an outstanding fall, Coach Tim Norris said players are eager to get back on the course.

"We have a veteran team this season," Norris said. "I think these guys are very motivated by the success we had last year as well as last fall. They want to build on that, and I do not see any complacency on our team right now."

Norris plans to use seniors Aaron Watkins, A.J. Elgert, Greg Douglas and Tim Moody along with junior Matt Van Cleave.

"We are all positive about getting back to where we left off," Watkins said. "We are confident in the work we have done in the last few months."

The Matlock figures to be competitive with Missouri, Louisville, Virginia Tech, Miami and Ohio among the participating schools.

"It is not as much about the other teams as it is about playing the golf course," Norris said. "Focusing on your strengths and not trying anything fancy. Right now is the time to play conservative golf and see what happens."

Fortunately for K-State, the course should not be too hard to manage after the long layoff.

"It is going to be a fun golf course for the guys to play, especially the first time out this spring," Norris said. "It is not overly difficult, and there are some good holes. It is not a pushover, but it is not that difficult compared to the rest of our schedule. It will be a nice tune-up."

Kelly Glasscock | COLLEGIAN
Aaron Watkins hits the ball on the first hole at Colbert Hills Golf Course during the Jim Colbert Intercollegiate Invitational on Sept. 29. Watkins and the Wildcats will compete in the Matlock Collegiate Classic at the Grasslands Golf and Country Club in Lakeland, Fla., on Monday and Tuesday.

Norris is not placing any pressure on his players.

"The expectations are pretty low as far as place, finish or anything of that nature for this first tournament," Norris said of the Matlock.

"Good things can happen when you lower your expectations."

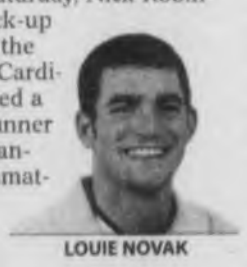
The Cats have spent a great deal of time getting ready for the trip to Florida. The team practices at Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

"We have some practice times in the afternoons, evenings and on the weekends," Norris said. "It gives us a chance to focus on some fundamental things. You cannot worry about which way the ball is going because it will only go 50 yards before it hits the netting."

Brandeberry was formerly an indoor facility for the football team.

"It is not quite a regulation field, but the roof is pretty high," Norris said of the complex.

"We are able to hit a pitch shot at the regular height. The flooring is Astroturf so we have been able to work on our short games a lot. We have a long season, but hopefully this will keep us fresh down the road."



Norris said the team has one basic goal this spring.

"To be better than last year," Norris said.

"We were one stroke away from qualifying for nationals. We ended up sixth in the Big 12 and the players are focusing on improving those finishes. Overall, if they improve and we are little bit better team, it will be a great year."

Player paralyzed in post-game melee

Last Saturday, Nick Robinson, a back-up guard for the Stanford Cardinal, drained a 35-foot runner to give Stanford a dramatic 80-77 victory over Arizona.

LOUIE NOVAK

The moment Robinson's shot fell through the iron hoop, fans at Maples Pavilion stormed the court and swallowed Robinson in celebration.

Everyone associated with Stanford University was standing on top of the world and ecstatic that Stanford was able to remain undefeated and improve their record to 20-0.

Everyone except future Cardinal Joe Kay.

Kay is a 6-foot-5 high school senior from Tucson, Ariz., with a 4.0 grade point average and a full volleyball scholarship to Stanford.

Instead, the high school senior spent last Saturday afternoon at the University Medical Center in Tucson.

Less then 24 hours prior to Robinson's unbelievable shot, Kay was involved in a similar celebration at his high school.

Kay capped off his basketball team's huge victory over Tucson power Salpointe Catholic with an explosive dunk.

According to Kay's father, Joe was tackled by one fan, then about 20 more piled on top of his son.

Kay was overcome by the surge and suffered a fractured jaw and a torn carotid artery.

"Just before we got to the locker room, he couldn't walk at all, and we had to drag him in," Tucson coach Gary Lewis told the Arizona Republic."

We knew something was serious. Joe is a great communicator and he wasn't speaking at all. He wouldn't respond to us anymore."

Doctors believe Kay's neck was torqued as if in a car wreck, causing the carotid artery to tear, cutting blood flow to the brain causing a stroke.

Kay does not have movement in his right side, he cannot walk and his speech is slurred.

This wasn't supposed to happen to Kay.

The young adult is smart, athletic and, as his father said, "He is terrific."

It is stories like these that make me question why things like this have to happen.

Could this awful accident have been prevented?

I believe it could have.

How often do we all see basketball courts being stormed by fans after dramatic victories?

I myself see them all the time, and have even been involved in a few.

I have no problem celebrating a big win. There is nothing wrong with showing emotion

NFL | Williams leaves Grambling State for Bucs

Williams

The NFL team scheduled a news conference Thursday to introduce the former Bucs and Washington Redskins quarterback as a personnel executive. Williams will work in the scouting department under director of pro personnel Mark Dominik.

Williams leaves his alma mater with a 52-18 record in six seasons.

Williams played for the Bucs from 1978-82 before a bitter contract dispute with former team owner Hugh Culverhouse led the quarterback to sign with the USFL's Oklahoma Outlaws.

He led Tampa Bay to the playoffs three times, including a loss to the Los Angeles Rams in the 1979 NFC championship game. After he left, the franchise didn't post another winning record until 1997.

MLB | Bonds' trainer charged

Barry Bonds' personal trainer, a track coach and top executives of a San Francisco-area nutritional supplements lab were charged Thursday with running an illegal drug distribution operation.

The 42-count federal indictment returned by a grand jury in San Francisco and obtained by the Associated Press alleges the scheme provided anabolic steroids, human growth hormone, EPO and other drugs to major league baseball and NFL players, as well as track and field stars.

None of the athletes were charged and none were named in the court documents.

The charges include conspiracy to distribute steroids, possession of human growth hormone, misbranding drugs with intent to defraud and money laundering.

According to the indictment, the four were involved in the scheme between December 2001 and Sept. 3, 2003, in which steroids were distributed to athletes on six different occasions.

NBA | Magic Johnson statue unveiled at Staples Center

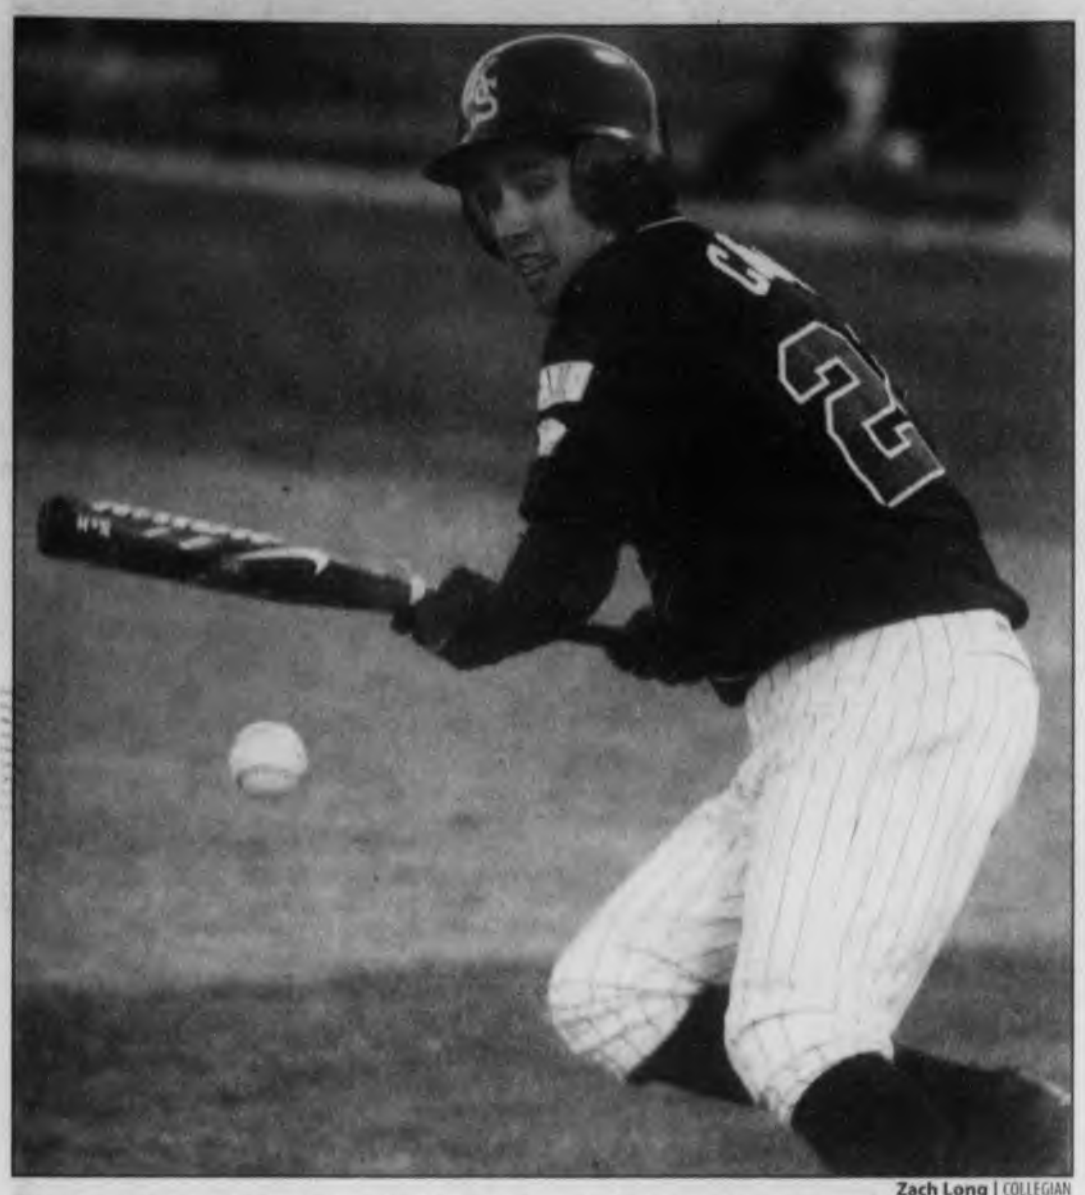
Johnson

A 17-foot bronze statue of the former Los Angeles Lakers' star was unveiled at dusk before several hundred fans and a handful of former teammates and dignitaries including NBA Commissioner David Stern and Mayor James K. Hahn.

Appropriately, the sculpted figure shows Johnson dribbling with his right hand and pointing with his left index finger as if leading a fast break, which he did so often for the Lakers from 1979-91 and briefly in 1996.

"Man, 25 years ago, coming here to this great city, I never expected anything like this," Johnson said. "This statue represents every player that I played with. It's not about me, it's about the team and the way we played together.

NHL | NHL claims $273 million loss last season



The NHL's 30 teams lost a combined $273 million during the 2002-03 season, according to a report issued on behalf of the league Thursday.

The report said 19 of the 30 teams had operating losses last season. In addition, the league said it spent 75 percent of its revenue on player costs, according to the report by former Securities and Exchange commission chairman Arthur Levitt.

The report said the league generated $1.99 billion in revenue last season.

The league is preparing for bargaining with the NHL Players' Association on a labor contract to replace one that expires Sept. 15.

guys that need to step up this year and play well on the field for us and also be good leaders."

Last season, the Cats posted a 7.41 team ERA and gave up 455 runs in only 447 innings played.

Returning bright spots from that staff are senior Brett Bagley and junior Eric Rollins. Bagley was 2-2 with a 5.87 ERA while Rollins picked up seven saves, the third-best season total in Cat history.

But it's Bagley, Hill said, who will get the nod today and be looked at as the ace all season.

"On the mound, obviously we're looking at Brett Bagley – we need him to have a good year for us," Hill said.

One guy who Hill said proved himself in the fall was senior Danny Wilson. Although he didn't see much time last season, Hill said Wilson should get the chance this year.

"Danny Wilson is a guy who has not pitched much but pitched really well in the fall for us," Hill said. "He's again a senior who we would look to hopefully have a break-out year."

With a new coach and new players comes an adjustment process that can take awhile to get under control. This season won't be about wins and losses, Hill said. He only wants to see his team bind together and show solid improvement.

"Rather than the wins and losses, we want to put together a game and learn how to play a complete game and be fundamentally sound," Hill said. "If we start to take care of those type of things, then obviously the success will start to take care of itself."

and school pride.

But what is the point in tackling an athlete and piling on top of him?

Running around and jumping on piles of peers who happen to be on a member of your school's team puts the athlete and other students in danger.

That is why Tiger Woods, who attended last weekend's game at Stanford, was retained from celebrating by one of his friends.

If fans can't help themselves from this kind of aggressive behavior, then I think court-storming should be banned.

If some sort of disciplinary action isn't installed, it is a matter of time before another athlete, high school or collegiate, is injured in a similar celebration.

As for Kay, time will tell if he recovers from his stroke.

Some stroke victims suffer permanent damage while some, over time, are able to return to normal functions.

I only wonder if the students who tackled Kay will ever recover from the guilt they hold for causing his injuries.

Tracksters travel to Iowa State Classic

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team looks to continue its streak of strong performances at the Iowa State Classic this Saturday in Ames, Iowa.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said the meet will provide the athletes another opportunity to qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championships in March.

"The meet is large in terms of numbers, and there are some pretty quality teams," he said. "It's a meet a lot of people circle on the schedule as an opportunity to run fast. We expect to see some fast times turned in."

The main factor playing into the faster times is Iowa State's track.

It is 300 meters long instead of the typical 200-meter indoor track. This will be an advantage for runners in any race 200 meters or longer because less time is spent turning, Rovelto said.

Sophomore Christian Smith is one of several Wildcats poised to have a big day. He will have another chance to qualify for the national meet after missing the qualifying time of 1 minute, 50.20 seconds in the 800 meter by only .04 seconds last weekend.

Despite battling injury, junior Joseph Lee is looking to qualify in the 800-meter race after placing fifth at the national meet last year.

On the women's side, strong performances are expected from junior Berenice Meza and junior Andrea Mendoza after they finished third and fourth, respectively, in the 600-yard run last week.

Senior middle-distance runners Lysaira Roman-Del Valle and Shauna Burrell also can post fast times in the 800 meter.

With the Big 12 Indoor Championships in Lincoln, Neb., only two weeks away, Rovelto said rest and health are concerns at this point in the season.

"We want to get to the conference meet healthy, but we want to have great performances, too," he said. "Performances will take care of themselves if people are healthy."

This weekend's meet and a final tune-up at next week's home meet provide the Wildcats with a few more opportunities to qualify for the NCAA Championships.

Rovelto expects big things from the team, but he knows the importance of exercising caution during the last few weeks of preparation and conditioning.

"We have to walk on eggshells at this time," he said.

"We don't want to do too much, but we still want quality work."

Baghdad explosion kills U.S. soldier Thursday

Latest American death brings total killed to 538; 375 soldiers killed in hostile action

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – An explosion killed an American soldier and wounded two others in a Baghdad suburb, the U.S. military reported Friday.

The blast occurred at 10:40 p.m. Thursday in Abu Ghraib, in the western part of the capital, hitting a patrol by members of the 16th Military Police Brigade, said Cpl. Craig Stowell, a spokesman at U.S. command.

The type of explosive used in the attack was not yet determined, he said.

Abu Ghraib, site of a notorious Saddam Hussein-era prison now being used by the Americans, has seen occasional mortar fire and other attacks in the past.

The death brought to 375 the number of Americans who have been killed in hostile action since the beginning of military operations in Iraq in March.

At least 538 Americans have died, including non-combat deaths.

Bull ride to fund memorial

By Leigh Ochsner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty competitors will try to ride eight seconds and qualify for the short go at the Brett Cushenbery Memorial Bull Ride, 7 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena.

Cushenbery, former K-State student and KSU Rodeo Club member, died Oct. 14, 2003, two days after a bull stepped on his chest at the Central Plains Rodeo Association finals in Hutchinson, Kan.

His best friend, A.J. Griffin, is coordinating and co-sponsoring the event along with other volunteers. All proceeds will be used to help pay funeral expenses.

The winner will receive $2,300 generated from $60 entry fees and $500 donated by Griffin.

Griffin said registration opened Monday and that by Tuesday, 30 bull riders had entered, including Jesse Schellhamer and Spud Whitman.

Schellhamer and Whitman, qualifiers for Professional Bull Riders, will be signing autographs.

JC Rodeo Co. from Roxbury, Kan., will provide the bulls.

Griffin said he expects students and area residents to attend.

"I'm hoping I pack Weber," he said.

Festival of Nations begins Monday

Trivia game show to quiz students on black history, culture, events

By Melissa Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a two-week delay, Union Program Council begins the spring semester's Festival of Nations schedule with a tribute to African-American culture.

Natalie Rolfe, president of the Black Student Union, said she is excited about her organization's upcoming event.

"We are hoping that this festival gives students a taste of the African-American culture, along with some knowledge of people who helped make America what it is today," she said.

In honor of Black History Month, the Multicultural UPC will be working with members of BSU during the event.

Group officials said they plan to get students excited about black history with their cash-winning game, "Who Wants to be a 20 Dollarnaire?" The game will resemble the trivia game show, "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?"

Angel Wilson, special program director for BSU, said she came up with the idea for the game after playing a similar one with her sorority sisters.

Wilson said the game will consist of 10 questions with a few variations to how the game is to be played. Each contestant will start with a penny for the first right answer and will advance for every correct answer thereafter, with a nickel, a dime, a quarter and eventually $20.

Questions will get progressively harder and will cover African-American history, culture, music and current events, she said.

"The intent of the game is not to have really difficult questions but to have fun and a whole lot of learning," Wilson said.

Contestants will be chosen randomly from the crowd and allowed the usual three lifelines, 50/50, phone-a-friend and an audience poll.

Accompanying the entertainment will be food and cultural music.

"I think students benefit anytime there is an opportunity for knowledge," Wilson said. "Because the experience is free, students can take advantage of getting something while paying nothing."

Web sites offer chance to find relationships without dating

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dating scene can be scary, intimidating or empty at times. More people are choosing to skip the dating scene altogether by meeting someone on the Internet. Here are four Web sites that can help you find your match.

WWW.LAVALIFE.COM

How it works: Like a standard personals site. You create a free profile using your information telling who you are, what you like and what you are looking for. You can browse other profiles and choose who you want to talk to.

Cost: To post a profile is free, but you have to purchase "credits" to contact other members. There are three credit packages: Fun & Flirt, Mix & Mingle and Click & Connect, which cost $14.99, $24.99 and $39.99, respectively.

Best for: People looking for any kind of relationships. The site offers three categories or "communities": dating, relationship and intimate encounters.

WWW.EHARMONY.COM

How it works: You take a 500-question survey "designed to profile the 29 dimensions that scientific research has shown are crucial to long-term success in relationships." The profile supposedly eliminates 99.7 percent of people who are wrong for you. The site matches you with the other 0.3 percent.

Cost: Cost for membership is $49.95 for one month, $99.95 for three months, $159.95 for six months and $249.95 for a year.

Best for: People looking for a soulmate, not a fling.

WWW.FRIENDSTER.COM

How it works: First you create a personality profile with information about you, your interests and favorites music, books, etc. Then you invite your friends to be part of your "personal private networking community." They invite their friends who invite their friends to be part of your network. You can only view profiles from people in your network.

Cost: No, basic membership is free.

Best for: Single people, couples or anybody looking to meet new people. Not just for singles looking for romance.

WWW.PERSONALS.YAHOO.COM

How it works: Create a free profile with your information which is posted on the site. You can browse other profiles and choose who you want to talk to.

Cost: Yes, if you are a full member. Cost is $19.95 for one month, $42.95 for three months and $89.95 for a year.

Best for: Anyone looking for any kind of relationship, but geared toward those interested in more than "just friends."

New dating approaches include ads, online services

By Lara Hastings
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Single white male seeks single white female for a rendezvous and possible relationship.

Sometimes that is all the information given when searching through the sea of personal ads in the newspaper.

"I honestly think it's a joke," Christine Barrera, junior in social work, said. "Anybody can answer a personal ad, and you wouldn't know a thing about them."

Sometimes, finding that special person is a little difficult, and although placing or responding to a personal ad in the newspaper may be an option, it is always a gamble.

With the vague descriptions, how can you ensure the wicked witch or the axe murderer won't show up on your doorstep for a date?

There is no way to completely prevent a disaster when dealing with a personal ad, but there is a way to lessen the chances.

Internet personals and dating sites have recently become popular and have produced some success stories.

Unlike newspaper personals, Web sites such as HotorNot.com, eHarmony.com and imatchup.com allow users to post and search pictures and profiles of potential mates.

Some sites also permit users to provide a list of traits they are looking for in a person. The sites are specialized and allow users to match profiles with others based on certain values such as political views or religious beliefs.

"Personal ads are probably not for younger people," Jereme Nollett, junior in architectural engineering, said. "They are probably better for older people who work a lot and don't have time to date."

Although personal ads may seem to appeal to an older crowd, each site has a wide range of ages from which to choose. There are also sites geared toward certain age groups.

HotorNot.com seems to target a younger crowd. It has a rating system where users click through pictures and rate the person based on their looks on a one through 10 scale. The rating section is completely free. Users only pay a small fee when they want to meet somebody.

The site also helps its users by sending them an e-mail when somebody is interested in meeting them.

Other sites like eHarmony.com are targeted to people who are a little older and serious about finding a significant other. The fees are a little heftier, and the profiles and matching system are a little more intense.

The site is based on research done by Neil Clark Warren, psychologist, and his 29 dimensions of compatibility. There is also a section that features success stories of couples who met through eHarmony.com.

Still worried about trying a personal ad?

There are millions of dating and personal sites on the Internet, each with its own specialized features.

The sites include a wide range of people with different personalities and dating statuses. Some are looking for a serious relationship, others are looking for new friends and still others are just looking for a high rating and a little ego boost.

So if it's true love you're after or even just a friend, Mr. or Miss Right may be just a click away.

Tasty wines available for low-cost Valentine's Day romance

Red wines complement hearty meals, while white wines go with poultry, seafood menus

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students on a budget who want to enjoy fine, flavorful wines with their valentine this week have many affordable options, Manhattan merchants said.

Jeff Filby, owner of Filby Liquor Store, said there are many wine brands available within reasonable price ranges for college students.

"There are so many good wines you can get in the $10-bottle range, and I think a lot of the popularity of more expensive wines has faded. There are so many you can get cheap," Filby said.

He said that amateur wine tasters have difficulty determining the difference between cheaper and more expensive wines, but to connoisseurs, the difference is clear.

"To appreciate the differences between cheap and expensive wines, you have to have a trained palette," Filby said. "As far as recommending wines for people who haven't drank much and are experimenting, I generally recommend they get a white zinfandel or a blush that leans more toward the sweeter wines."

Filby said for those drinkers who want a wine with an international flair but a domestic price, he recommends an Australian chardonnay.

"There's an Australian chardonnay called Yellow Tail. It will run from $5.99 to $7.99 per bottle, so it's reasonably cheap," he said.

Bob Campbell, manager of Candlewood Liquor, said he recommends domestic wines, such as Korbel or Vallatore, both of which are from California.

When selecting the proper wine for recreational drinking, Campbell said, it is important to look for a wine that has a strong flavor and body.

"In a well-balanced wine, the unique characteristics of the grape variety show through," he said. "Red zinfandel is kind of spicy, and some vintages can be too spicy, so when you drink the wine, that's all you think about. That would be an out-of-balance wine."

Campbell said he believes there are certain wines that complement certain foods, much like colors and textures in clothing complement each other in the fashion industry.

"White wines are lighter in characteristics, so when you pair them with food, you don't want to overpower the food with the wine," Campbell said. "Red wines are heartier in flavor and body, so they can stand up better to flavorful foods."

However, Filby, said he disagrees and that a current trend in the wine industry is to encourage drinkers to go simply with what they enjoy and not worry about which wine goes with which kind of food.

"At one time, that was the rule of thumb," he said. "You drank white wines with fish, shellfish and poultry, and red wines went with beef, lamb and red meat.

"In the last few years, they've thrown that to the wind. A lot of the experts are saying to find what you like and drink it."

Gretchen Ekart, manager of Harry's Uptown, said she agrees.

"It's fun to taste a few and find what you like," Ekart said. "I wouldn't worry as much about marrying the food and the wine. Don't worry about what other people like. It's all about what you like."

Plan to raise taxes moves to state Senate

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – A Senate committee advanced Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' plan for raising taxes to aid public schools on Thursday after deleting a proposed increase in the state property tax levy.

Key senators cautioned that the plan's endorsement by the Assessment and Taxation Committee reflected a desire to move the bill toward Senate consideration rather than solid support for raising taxes.

"At this point it's tough to tell if a majority support a tax increase and, if so, in what combination," said Majority Leader Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan. "The Senate is keeping the governor's proposal moving, as it said it would."

The tax committee's 4-3 vote sent the bill to the Senate Education Committee, which will now study its provisions for reforming the way the state distributes aid to school districts.

Sebelius proposed to raise taxes by about $304 million over three years. But the bill left the taxation committee with provisions that would yield only $251 million.

The Senate Education Committee could debate the bill as early as Monday, according to its chairman, Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer.

"It's on the fast track," Umbarger said.

Sebelius proposed to raise taxes by about $304 million over three years. But the bill left the taxation committee with provisions that would yield only $251 million.

Under the bill, the state's 5.3 percent sales tax would rise to 5.5 percent this July, 5.6 percent in July 2005 and 5.7 percent in July 2006.

In addition, the state would impose a 5 percent surcharge on personal income taxes starting with the 2004 tax year.

The committee removed Sebelius' proposal for raising the state's 20-mill property tax levy for schools to 21 mills in 2005 and 22 mills in 2007.

For the owner of a $100,000 home, those increases would have raised the annual property tax levy – now $184 – by $9 in 2005 and again in 2007.

U.S. commander in Iraq escapes injury in attack

By Robert Burns
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FALLUJAH, Iraq – Insurgents launched a bold attack Thursday on an Iraqi civil defense compound just as the commander of all U.S. forces in the Middle East, Gen. John Abizaid, arrived to visit.

Three explosions ripped through an area near the compound and a six-minute gun battle ensued.

Abizaid and his party, including another senior Army commander, escaped injury and quickly left.

Although soldiers said insurgent attacks on the compound are not uncommon, Thursday's close call suggested the attackers may have targeted Abizaid, the four-star general who runs the war in Iraq – raising new questions about how much control Americans have in the region.

It also seemed to underscore that much work remains before the Iraqis are ready to handle violence encouraged by shadowy former members of Saddam Hussein's government as well as foreign terrorists.

In Thursday's incident, Iraqis initially refused to go into a mosque to search for the attackers, U.S. officials said.

The violence broke out as a U.N. envoy met with Iraq's leading Shiite cleric and told him the world was behind his demand for national elections.

But there was no sign of agreement on when a vote would be held – the central issue in Shiite opposition to the U.S. plan for handing over power to Iraqis this summer.

The cleric, Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Husseini al-Sistani, wants elections to create a provisional legislature that can run the country, but the United States says there is not enough time to organize an election before the deadline for transferring power.

In New York, the spokesman of U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan suggested that moving up elections wasn't likely and the discussions were centered on finding an alternative to Washington's plan for local councils or "caucuses."

Friday the 13th

■ The scientific name for a fear of the number 13 is "tridecaphobia," while the scientific name for a fear of Friday the 13th itself is "paraskevidekatriaphobia."

■ No one knows the exact origin of our fear of the number 13, but other superstitions include the "devil's luck," which links well-known killers throughout history with the fact that they each have 13 letters in their names: Jack the Ripper, Jeffrey Dahmer, Charles Manson and Theodore Bundy, to name a few.

■ Many buildings skip constructing a 13th floor, and many airplanes do not have a 13th row because of the superstition surrounding the number.

■ Every year will have a Friday the 13th once, but no more than three times.

■ On Friday, March 13, 1998, there was a full moon and a lunar eclipse in the same evening.

'Tom Sawyer' to play at McCain Saturday

By Matt Stuchlik
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Grab ma, pa and the kids and go to McCain Auditorium this weekend for a musical performance of the Mark Twain classic, "Tom Sawyer."

The play is presented by the performers of the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., and will start at 7 p.m. Saturday at McCain.

The Twain novel about the misadventures of a mischievous boy got its start as a book and moved to the Broadway musical scene a few years ago.

Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain, said the show will dazzle both students and families.

"It is a great opportunity for students and families alike to see the classic come to life," Jackson said. "Many families will fill a great deal of McCain's seating."

The novel, which was banned in many public schools several years ago, has been swirling in controversy in recent years because of some racism involved in parts of the story. The use of racial slang remains because of the time in which the story was created, Jackson said.

"The story has been cleaned up somewhat," Jackson said. "The context of the time is the 1800s, and slavery was part of everyday life.

"The adults are the racist people in the story. It is actually the children who don't know and don't care about what color someone's skin is. The kids in the story are very friendly and innocent," he said.

The tickets are $5.50 for students and $9.50 for the general public.

Parts of Microsoft code leaked online

By Allison Linn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE – Microsoft Corp. said late Thursday that parts of its Windows source code – the tightly guarded blueprint of its dominant computer operating system – had been leaked over the Internet.

Microsoft spokesman Tom Pilla said in an interview with the Associated Press that some incomplete portions of the Windows 2000 and Windows NT 4.0 source code had been illegally made available on the Internet.

Access to the source code could allow hackers to exploit the operating system and attack machines running some versions of Windows. Several versions of the operating system, including the ones containing leaked code, are used on hundreds of millions of computers worldwide.

Such access could also provide a competitive edge to Microsoft rivals, who would gain a much better understanding of the inner workings of Microsoft's technology.

The company was made aware of the leak Thursday and was investigating, Pilla said. He did not know how much of the code had been leaked, when the leak occurred or how many people might have gained access to it. The company could not immediately pinpoint the source of the leak and has contacted law enforcement authorities, he said.

Pilla said there was no indication the leak was a result of a breach of Microsofts corporate network. There was no known immediate affect on Microsoft customers, he said.

Microsoft has previously shared some of its source code with some companies, U.S. governments and universities under tight restrictions that prevent such organizations from making it publicly available. But the company has argued that the blueprint to its operating system is proprietary, and shouldn't be made public.

Still, because some people outside Microsoft have had access to the code, analysts said it wasn't too surprising for such a leak to occur.

"I don't understand why it hasn't happened sooner, because there are so many (organizations) out there that have access to the source code," said Marc Maiffret of eEye Digital Security Inc., of Aliso Viejo, Calif.

But analysts and security experts cautioned that it was hard to assess the potential damage the leak could cause, since so few details were available.

"Frankly, I'm not sure anybody can fully assess that, other than Microsoft," said Al Gillen, research director for systems software at research group IDC.

The leak could put more Windows users at risk because it opens the door to more people finding vulnerabilities in Microsoft's code – and using them in malicious ways, Maiffret said. That could, in turn, wreak havoc on Microsoft's ability to respond with fixes in a controlled manner.

But he cautioned that it was too early to say whether such a major threat existed.

Some experts said it seemed more likely the leak could be most valuable to Microsoft rivals.

"What people could learn from it has the potential to make other organizations that are building competing products ... make products that can compete with (Microsoft) more effectively," Gillen said.

SENATE | Senators voice opposition to Sebelius' education funding

upset with the proposal.

"If you want to see the Faculty Senate members get excited, mention Sebelius' proposal or tuition waivers," O'Hara said.

O'Hara said the state has sent in a micromanaging team telling the university what cuts it could make.

"The state has got to find a creative way to fund their budget. What better way than our restricted fees?" he said.

Senate members have decided to send a copy of the resolution to the Kansas Board of Regents, President Jon Wefald and the universities' students, among others.

A state education day is scheduled for Feb. 23 in Topeka. O'Hara and other senators plan to voice their concerns with the proposal.

"As students, we have the right to say no to the government and stand up for what we can."

John O'Hara
STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

"As students, we have the right to say no to the government and stand up for what we can," he said.

Senate also reconsidered an allocation of funds to the KSU Young Democrats from November. The bill failed, 13-36-2 after heated discussion.

Senators were given a chance to change their votes via e-mail. Those votes were confirmed Thursday.

"The vote via e-mail brings forth legality issues, and the vote wasn't just confirmed online," Laura Wood, Arts and Sciences senator, said.

In a previous vote, the allocations committee voted 5-4 in favor of giving Young Democrats the requested funding. The "confirmation" brought a count of 1-8-3, with an three more people responding.

The requested money would cover part of the expenses when traveling to a Fall National Committee Meeting. Senators denied this allocation, but passed a similar bill in 2000 for the same event.

Allocations Chair Eleri Griffin said the bill has only brought unnecessary difficulties to the allocations committee.

"We spent three months of my time on this only because whoever picked up the application ignored our accountant when she said not to write anything about political campaigning on the application," Griffin said.

The original application for an allocation from the student was received six days prior to the departure of the group. The deadline normally is four weeks in advance.

Also on the agenda for Thursday was a decision made to include graduate students in the Kansas State University Undergraduate Honor System. It now will be named the Kansas State University Honor System because of the graduate school's adoption of the system.

Phil Anderson, honor system director, said the graduate school needed ample time to consider the track record of the honor system.

"I've pestered them for five years in my annual report. I guess we had to show it worked before they would even consider it," he said.

"By talking to each other, not at each other and putting yourself in someone else's skin, we can begin to understand," Williams said.

She said a factor in the confusion surrounding race is the apparent double-standard on the usage of the epithet "nigger."

"Blacks have used the word nigger to their advantage, and they know that," Williams said. "Whites have used it to their disadvantage, and blacks know that, too, which is why we should all just leave it alone."

Williams said blacks have been using the word "behind closed doors" forever, but the word came to prominence again in the 1990s following the hip-hop revolution.

She said the motivation was to strip it of its negative connotation.

"It became more about attitude then race," she said.

"My nephew once told me it was used to describe doing something stupid like robbing a bank without a mask."

Williams said the only way to enact change is to confront our personal bias and bigotry.

"Remember K-State: Laughter has no accent," she said, "and smiling needs no translation."

U.S. military arrests No. 41 on Iraqi most-wanted list

By Lee Keath
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The capture of Mohammed Zimam Abdul Razaq leaves only 10 top figures still at large from the list of 55 issued after the Saddam Hussein regime fell. Abdul Razaq was No. 41 and the four of spades in the military's "deck of cards" of top fugitives.

Deputy Interior Minister Ahmed Kadhum Ibrahim touted the arrest as evidence that the still-rebuilding Iraqi police force "can be depended upon in the fight against terrorism," looking to give his troops a boost a day after police in the turbulent city of Fallujah were overwhelmed by dozens of gunmen in one of the best organized guerrilla attacks yet.

U.S. officials gave conflicting reports Sunday on whether foreign fighters or Saddam loyalists carried out the bold, daytime assault on the Fallujah police station.

At least 25 people, mostly police, were killed in the raid, more than 30 people were wounded, and the attackers freed dozens of prisoners at the station. The assault raised questions about whether Iraqi security forces are ready to take the front line against the insurgency when the United States hands over power to the Iraqis on June 30.

Abdul Razaq headed Saddam's Baath Party in the northern provinces of Nineveh and Tamim, which include the cities of Mosul and Kirkuk. He earlier served as interior minister, and Ibrahim said he kept a "personal prison" behind the police academy where "innocent people" were held in dog cages.

Abdul Razaq was presented to reporters at the Interior Ministry, where he sat next to Ibrahim on a couch, wearing a black traditional Arab robe and a white headdress. He was then handed over to the U.S.-led coalition, Ibrahim said at a press conference later.

Police caught Abdul Razaq's trail when they were tipped off that his son was trying to obtain weapons and fake passports, Ibrahim said.

Police watched the elder Abdul Razaq for 10 days before the special operations unit – trained by U.S. experts – moved in on his house in the Baghdad

Tim Glaser, flight instructor at Kansas Air Center, watches as his student Rick Hartley prepares for flight. "I just basically get to sit beside him and yell at him," Glaser said of instructing.

K-State alumnus gives students their wings

By Melissa Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tim Glaser can fly.

He has the aspiration of becoming an airline pilot, but he's not quite there yet.

Glaser graduated from K-State-Salina in 2001 with a degree in airway science and has been teaching flight lessons since.

"Instructing lessons is just a stepping stone for where I want to be later," Glaser said.

Glaser, chief flight instructor at Kansas Air Center, said getting a license to fly might be easier than most believe.

First, the person has to be at least 16 years old to fly the aircraft solo and must be 17 years old before they are permitted to get their license.

Getting the actual license consists of a written test and a proficiency check, or "check ride," in which the individual flies with a designated examiner to test their ability to control the plane.

There is a Federal Aviation Administration checkup that examines English-speaking skills and eyesight of the individual.

Finally, the student must complete 40 hours of total flight time.

Training is usually done one or more times a week for one to two hours at a time and can take anywhere from two months to a year to complete. This fluctuates depending on the time that the individual is willing to put into the learning process.

"After teaching lessons now for a year and a half," Glaser said, "I've found that if people stay committed, they are able to get their license in two to three months."

Glaser is teaching eight individuals but has had anywhere from four to 15 students at a time. He has worked a great deal with ROTC and said he would love to have more students. His students are all ages, from high school to older individuals.

Wendy Ornelas, associate professor in architecture, is one of Glaser's students. After one year of training, she is ready to get her flying license.

"My favorite part about learning to fly was the feeling of freedom and control that it gave me," Ornelas said. "It's hard at first, when you lack a comfort level and are naive about what's going on, but once you loosen up and begin to understand things, it gets a lot easier."

Krystallos store returns to Aggieville

By Oksana Boyko
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After shutting down in May after a fire, Aggieville retailer Krystallos is coming back.

Last week construction workers began clearing the debris of what used to be Aggie Station, following the May 16, 2003, electrical fire originating in the bathroom ceiling that left the building in ashes. The fire also claimed next-door Krystallos and caused smoke damage to several local businesses.

Nine months after the incident, crews are excavating and building the foundation for a new two-story building.

Lin Rose, owner of Krystallos, said her business will be on the ground floor along with another store, and the second floor would house four apartments.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said she thought the other store on the ground floor would be a retail store as well.

Rose said after the building that housed both Aggie Station and Krystallos burned last year, owner Ron Bramlage decided to rebuild right away.

"It has taken this long to get the building plans and permits in order," she said. "We've just now started breaking ground and working there."

She said the target

Health center's poor reputation undeserved

"The first time I got sick at college, I called my mom and asked her what to do," Amanda Day, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "Once I start feeling bad, I want to get over it as soon as I can so I don't miss anything."

The student health care fee allows students to see a health care provider free of charge. Other services and procedures are offered at a discounted rate.

"Our health care providers know students often don't know how to access health care, and our services our designed with that in mind," said Cathie Barry, assistant clinical director and risk manager for K-State's Lafene Health Center. "I think student health centers work well in the college setting to teach young adults how to access health care."

And they thought it was just an East Coast thing. Hundreds of gay couples lined up outside San Francisco City Hall last week to get married.

This followed Mayor Gavin Newsom's lifting of a same sex marriage ban that has been in effect since 2000.

No U.S. state allows gay marriage, but a heated debate rages concerning whether Massachusetts lawmakers should overturn a landmark state supreme court ruling allowing such unions.

NOT AGAIN

Cause of fatal roof collapse unknown

By Mara D. Bellaby
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW – Russian rescue workers pumped warm air Sunday into the ruins of an indoor water park, hoping the heat would help victims survive a day after the roof collapsed, killing at least 25 people and injuring more than 100.

As many as 17 people are missing, presumably buried under the debris of the Transvaal Park on Moscow's southwestern outskirts, officials said.

The search for survivors continued even though Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov said late Sunday there was virtually no chance of finding anyone alive.

Rescuers shoveled snow from the tangled mass of steel and concrete, some standing atop a large stone that appeared to be part of a mock tropical scene.

Initial reports said an explosion caused the collapse Saturday night, but Luzhkov and other officials said there was no evidence of a blast. The city has been on edge since a deadly Feb. 6 subway bombing that President Vladimir Putin blamed on Chechen rebels.

The collapse left a hole the size of a football field in the glass-and-concrete roof. On Sunday, cranes lifted heavy chunks of concrete, metal beams and giant buckets of broken building materials.

With temperatures in the teens, rescuers used generators to pump heat into the area to increase the chances of survival. Search dogs were brought in, cutting their paws on broken glass as they sniffed through debris.

Periodically, the rescue workers called for silence to listen for signs of life. They heard none, however, and by Sunday night rescuers called off the search and stopped trying to heat the rubble, said Viktor Starostin, spokesman for the Moscow branch of the Emergency Situations Ministry.

Investigators said a heavy buildup of snow, the stresses caused by the difference between the indoor and outdoor temperatures and seepage into the concrete supports may have led to the disaster.

Moscow prosecutor Anatoly Zuyev said faulty construction or maintenance was probably to blame. He said prosecutors were opening a criminal investigation into possible negligence.

They were questioning managers of the park, its architects, engineers and builders, and would also talk to witnesses, Zuyev said. He said pieces of the wreckage would be tested.

The state body in charge of construction, Gosstroi, suspended the licenses of the Turkish company that built the park, Kocak Insaat, and the Russian architectural firm that designed it, the Interfax news agency reported.

Statements about the death toll varied. Luzhkov said late Sunday that 24 bodies had been pulled from the rubble and one person had died in a hospital.

Emergency Situations Minister Sergei Shoigu said 17 people were believed missing, a figure apparently based on belongings left unclaimed at the swimming pool area.

Asked if there was a chance any could have survived, Luzhkov said, "Unfortunately, no."

Mourners left dozens of carnations on a brick wall beyond the police line outside the building, and a single candle burned next to the growing pile of flowers.

Of 111 people injured, 78 remained hospitalized Sunday evening, five of them in critical condition, Luzhkov said. There were 27 children among those hospitalized.

A child's birthday party was being held in the pool area when the roof collapsed, Moscow police spokesman Kirill Mazurin said.

"There was a sudden sound – a crack – and my older son said it was like a terrible dream," Olga Matveyeva, whose two sons were at the park with their grandmother, told NTV.

"It was as if the roof collapsed in two ... and there was terrible panic as people tried to get out however they could."

Matveyeva said her sons had escaped in their bathing suits and bare feet and were hospitalized with frostbite.

Huschka, Shrauner announce candidacy

Pre-election weeks are rich with fresh ideas, but Bryce Huschka and Justin Shrauner, sophomores in industrial engineering, promise students an innovative approach to leadership throughout the year.

The pair has set its main goal as tuition stabilization.

Huschka and Shrauner propose to limit annual increases and spread increases over a longer period.

"The current plan is to raise tuition for about three more years in 20-25 percent clips. If we spread this into six years, we can have a lower increase each year," Shrauner said.

The pair realizes lower tuition increases may impede the university's development, but Huschka and Shrauner have an answer for that. They suggest increasing K-State's marketability for out-of-state students whose tuition is roughly 3.5 times higher than Kansans.

"Many states are now increasing their in-state tuition, so someone from Colorado, when their in-state tuition is comparable to our out-of-state, is more likely to want to come here," Huschka said.

Attracting more out-of-state students would also make campus more culturally and ethnically heterogeneous.

"We have $100,000 allotted to diversity right now, and this (measure) with no extra money would bring more diversity," Huschka said.

The second objective is to modify the academic advising process.

The pair suggests fighting the shortage of academic advisers by hiring additional staff to deal with freshmen and sophomores' formal advising, thus allowing faculty to concentrate on juniors and seniors.

"We feel that juniors and seniors have the ability to advise (freshmen and sophomores) which classes to take.

It would create more campus jobs and put money the university is spending back into students' pockets," Shrauner said.

Re-evaluation of technology is the third pillar of Huschka and Shrauner's campaign. The pair is specifically concerned with enrollment and wait-list processes, modifications that were started by John O'Hara and Travis Stryker, current student body president and vice president.

"Ensuring how O'Hara had a wait-list system set up, we want to make sure that, when a class is dropped, the first person on a wait-list is entered into class," Huschka said.

After being a Student Senate intern last year, Huschka is involved with Student Alumni Board and All-University Open House. Shrauner has been engaged in students' activities at the College of Engineering.

CAMPUS FOURUM

As a liberal, I want to correct something. When we see Will Ferrell playing George W. Bush on "Saturday Night Live," we wish the president was that smart.

Did you hear the joke about the pencil? It's pointless.

James Hurla, you better hide, because if we find you, we're tying you up and force-feeding you vodka until you pass out.

Let me guess: James Hurla is a virgin.

How much does a condom rose bush cost? I want to put one in my back yard.

James Hurla, you will not get a date without roofies.

James Hurla, which one of your friends has drunk cat pee?

James Hurla, you also forgot to put in your article that you live at home with your mom and do not have a car.

Obviously, the Fourum editor is not doing their job because of the three double prints.

If I'm a vegetarian, and I go on the Atkins diet, do I call it the Atkins diet or anorexia?

I just cleaned out my apartment, and all I can say is, "the horror, the horror."

Without the greeks, all you dorm rats would have nowhere to party.

Dorm life: what a worthless existence.

Since when has Missouri been part of the United States?

I slaughtered five baby seals with my bare hands. Whatever, I do what I want.

Wow, when did all this snow get here? I mean, what's the deal?

Is it possible for a white male to join Alpha Phi Alpha? If so, I'd love to sign up.

I just found out that the girls at Pi Phi are really robots. They're not even really humans at all. They show no emotion.

Hi, I masturbate a lot. Can you tell I live in the dorms?

K-State should be called K-State Community College.

There's nothing like condom roses to say, "Hey, I'm making a shallow minimum effort. Now please go down on me."

Does anybody remember how Bobby Knight was looking for a job about the time we were looking for a new coach?

Yeah, variety and women may be spices in life, but watch out because too much of either brings heartburn.

Do the people who work for the Collegian think they're going to get hired by The Nation magazine?

So John Kerry is a womanizer just like Clinton. What is with you Democrats?

I just got a video camera stuck down the leg of my jeans, and it kinda tickled.

Nasrina Williams? more like the Fourum Nazi.

I applaud the Kansas State Student Senate Allocations Committee for doing the right thing.

Why is it that Congress can investigate Janet Jackson's boob during the Super Bowl, but they can't investigate Enron or Iraq? What's up with that?

The Derb actually made a decent meal for once today. Wow, amazing!

The Cat's Den sucks.

You can take the girl out of Johnson County, but you can't take Johnson County out of the girl.

This is a message for all you whiny women out there. If you decided to do something nice for your man, Valentine's Day might turn into Valentine's week or year. Think about it.

Animal kingdom

Society forced to tolerate elephants' appearance, stench

(Insert tongue firmly in cheek)

I have been called a tree-hugger.

I'm not a People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals junky, but I really love animals.

Not all of them, though – I loathe elephants.

They are the illegitimate children of the animal kingdom. They are the somewhat socially challenged step-child who just won't leave home, but modern society tells you to tolerate.

SCOTT SEEL

Seriously, they have been around for eons, and they just won't die out. They're old, wrinkly and smelly.

The only redeeming value in this lumbering creature is the amount of money it's worth when it's dead.

Don't even get me started on their size.

Apparently, just because you weigh six million tons, it is OK to stomp around with cavalier disregard for what small animals and sovereign nations might be crushed underneath your wrinkled foot.

Yes, if you are powerful, you answer only to your Creator.

Elephants make their laws based on what their Creator says.

He is the only possible Creator, so all elephants must follow His guidance.

Yes, He is a He.

Women are not worthy of powerful positions, the elephants think.

The best part about being an elephant is, you get to tell people what your Creator wants. Who is going to argue with an elephant?

Every time a species with different characteristics immigrates from a less-developed savannah in search of a better life, elephants get their panties in a bundle.

Did you think it was a coincidence that all elephants are the same color?

The most annoying part about elephants is when they want to go somewhere, they line up in a chain and grab each other's tails and just follow the leader, who may not be intelligent or even possess the capability to compose a coherent thought.

They will follow into any kind of war he wants, even if it violates international law.

There are gay elephants, believe it or not, but we don't talk about them.

There is a "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy in the animal kingdom. If the elephants ignore their not-so-heterosexual counterparts, they will go away and nobody will have to deal with the hassle of actually acknowledging their status as elephants and treating them as such.

In the end, it's quite ironic. Elephants die, are buried, and in a mere couple thousand years, they turn into oil for other elephants with which to be obsessed.

As much as I despise elephants, I've really become quite fond of donkeys.

Donkeys are not the most glamorous animal in the world, but that's why I like them.

They are gentle, caring and get the job done. They constantly work for the betterment of society.

Yup.

I hate elephants.

Sure, they have the right to be elephants, and every once in awhile you get one that's kinda cool to hang out with. But in the end, I'd just rather not deal with them.

Remember, the most famous elephant's name is Dumbo.

Stubborn donkeys good for children's games

(Insert tongue firmly in cheek)

Donkeys are only good for one thing – taking their tails off and making an entertaining game for children.

I hate donkeys.

Their braying voices can carry up to two miles. But do they use this talent to promote positive changes in the barnyard?

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

No, instead they sit on their asses and bray for other hard-working animals in the kingdom to submit more and more of their grass and hay.

Although donkeys can't provide for themselves, they consider themselves superior to other creatures in the animal kingdom. They attribute this superiority to intellect, because they claim to be tolerant of all the other animals in the kingdom.

Except for the religious animals, or conservative animals, or any animals who disagree with the "accept anything that crawls into the barn" principle.

These donkeys also turn a collective cold shoulder to their Creator. Maybe they are angry about the big ears or ugly teeth. But any mention of His name in the barnyard causes a frenzy among the donkeys.

These donkeys enjoy the freedoms the barnyard allows but refuse to take responsibility for their own well-being.

The top donkeys are fighting to "take back the barnyard" by kicking stones at the elephants. But the donkeys are simply providing a three-ring circus of who can bray the loudest.

Unfortunately for the donkeys, only one smart ass has emerged from their group in years, and he committed perjury to the barnyard assembly.

With so much importance being placed on the art of being loud, donkeys have little time to adhere to morals or responsibility.

Reproduction of foals is a primary example.

Jennets (female donkeys) are willing to mate but rarely want to reproduce. If the Jennet's mating habits accidentally lead to impregnation, these animals often reject their foals.

Additionally, the donkeys advocate same-sex mating. They don't seem to care that this is an abnormality in the animal kingdom. The other animals all stick to male-female pairings, but the donkeys just have to be different.

Donkeys simply have no common sense.

They reject their offspring but continue to embrace animals like lions and tigers. These are animals who want to destroy the donkeys, elephants and all the other animals in the barn yard.

The lions and tigers tie explosives to the unsuspecting donkey's back in an attempt to terrorize all animals.

But the unsuspecting donkey continues to lumber across the desert with explosives on his back. He is unaware of the potential for destruction he carries.

The donkey lumbers across the desert braying about the elephants' decision to fight the lions and tigers.

In the end, it will be the elephants that will save the ass from extinction.

The brink of barnyard elections has caused my distaste for donkeys to rise even more.

The elephant can be clumsy. However, the protection it offers the animal kingdom and its recognition of morality and family values outweigh any positive attributes the donkey may claim.

Unsafe ice could prove fatal; officials give warning signs

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As chilly winter temperatures continue to rise, activities like ice skating or ice fishing start to appeal to students who are tired of being stuck in their houses or apartments.

These activities might seem harmless enough, but warmer temperatures can make the ice more dangerous than it appears.

Luke Nihart, natural resource officer for Tuttle Creek State Park, said the thick appearance of the ice can be deceiving.

"Ice thaws from the bottom up," Nihart said. "You can't see the ice has fallen away. It looks thicker than it is."

Water below the ice maintains temperatures from 36-38 degrees, no matter how cold it gets above the ice.

"When it gets above 32 degrees, it warms up from both directions," said Chuck Bever, environmental scientist at Tuttle Creek.

When the snow and ice begin to melt, the ice takes on a milky appearance, which means it is not very stable.

Nihart said a limited number of people have been on the ice but encouraged people to stay away.

A person would not have much warning if ice were about to give way. One might hear cracking or notice the ice beginning to slush up on top, but by then it could be too late, he said.

"It can be slow, but a lot of times, unfortunately, it's fast," Nihart said. "You're out there and it just happens."

Once somebody falls through the ice, it can be very hard to get out. Often the ice will break away as the person tries to pull himself up.

"It's almost like a trap you can't get out of," Nihart said.

Once in the water, a person may have as little as five minutes before hypothermia sets in. As body parts get colder, cells are not able to function.

"Within minutes, everything is cooled off to the point that your respiration and your heart rate has all but ceased," said Jay Reppert, medical director of Lafene Health Center.

If medical assistance arrives quickly, the person could suffer minimal bodily damage. But if no medical assistance is on the way, or it takes a long time to arrive, the results can be deadly.

After hypothermia sets in, people can become delusional and not realize they are in danger. They may stop trying to save themselves.

Reppert said once a person is out of the ice, he should be taken to a warm environment and have wet clothes removed.

Heating blankets, hot water bottles or other external sources of heat should be used to warm the person.

Medical attention should be sought if the person isn't responsive.

Because of the injuries that can come from being on the ice, Nihart discourages people from it altogether.

"A lot of times it's just a no-win situation," Nihart said.

Traveling exhibit teaches black history

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kelly Glasscock | COLLEGIAN
Megan Clapp, of Joe Gelroth's fifth-grade grade class, reads about kings of Africa at a display sponsored by Wonder Workshop Children's Museum at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School.

K-State is not the only school celebrating Black History Month.

The Wonder Workshop Children's Museum has been doing its part to celebrate with an Underground Railroad traveling exhibit, which is visiting elementary schools in Manhattan this month.

Richard Pitts, executive director and co-founder of the museum, said the traveling exhibit has four parts for the children to utilize.

The first part is about African contributions from ancient civilizations, which Pitts said chronicles African achievements before arriving on the North American continent.

The next part compares ancient African slavery to American slavery. There will be re-created chains that to what slaves wore for the students to try on.

"Most people can't imagine what it was like back then," Pitts said.

"This brings it into perspective for the children."

Pitts said the third part focuses on what can happen when everyone works together.

"The abolitionists helped free the slaves even though it was against the law," he said. "There is an interactive computer program that tells about different abolitionists for the kids to use."

Pitts said students will be asked to think of the positive and negative results of the Civil War.

"Some positive results would be the women's suffrage movement, civil rights movement and gay rights movement," he said.

"Some negative results would be skinheads and the Ku Klux Klan."

Derek Clark, senior in marketing, and Kristin Copeland, junior in public relations, are in charge of the museum's in-house exhibit that will feature other figures in black history.

They have only been at the museum since January, and the exhibit is their first project.

"After this, we expect Richard will be giving us plenty of more projects to work on," Copeland said.

Rebekah Burger, senior in family life studies and community service and intern at the museum, said it always needs volunteers.

"Any one that comes in, no matter what major, with the skills that they have and the hobbies they like, Richard can always find something for them to do that they would enjoy," she said.

Steinbrenner exercises too much control over players, league

MATTHEW GIRARD

Just when I thought things couldn't get any worse for the Boston Red Sox, they did.

On Sunday, the New York Yankees pulled another fast one on Bean Town by trading for reigning American League MVP Alex Rodriguez, giving them yet another All-Star for their lineup.

The Red Sox had tried to get the veteran shortstop, but were unable to pull the trigger on the trade due to financial issues. The addition of Rodriguez would have given Boston a shot at knocking off the hated Yankees.

But then, Yankees owner George Steinbrenner stepped in and did what he loves to do most: screw the Red Sox.

This proves again that Steinbrenner will shell out whatever amount of money to win another World Series championship.

Adding to his already hefty payroll of more than $190 million, Steinbrenner will pay Rodriguez $112 million over the next seven years.

My question is, how can an owner keep buying any player he wants, regardless of the price, while the rest of the league stands by hoping they can keep just one marquee player on its roster?

Answer: The Boss has Major League Baseball and the city of New York by the cajones.

Although there are no guns involved, Steinbrenner runs his organization like a crime syndicate. Using his money from lucrative TV contracts, Steinbrenner terrorizes the baseball community. He bullies the small-market teams around, treating them like a farm league from which he can snatch players.

Once he flashes his money in front of a player he deems desirable, it is a hard chance to pass up. Playing for a team that has a chance of winning a championship ring every year will tempt a player every time.

The big heads in the so-called commissioner's office are powerless against him. All Steinbrenner has to do is threaten to take his revenue elsewhere. The last thing anyone in the MLB wants to do is lose the money the Yankees earn.

Steinbrenner wheels and deals as he sees fit and nobody asks any questions.

Commissioner Bud Selig said after the Collective Bargaining Agreement was finally hashed out, the increased revenue-sharing and a strict luxury tax plan would bring competitive balance back to the game.

Wrong.

In the years the Yankees have been on top and actually not won the World Series, none of those teams have been able to hold on to the players that helped win the championship, but the Yankees are in contention every year.

Steinbrenner simply resigns and plucks the free-agent market at will to build a team that will be the likely favorite for the title once again, and to put it plainly, I hate it.

But as long as a small-market team can beat the Yankees in the World Series, I'll be happy.

Dynasties-schmynasites.

Wildcat women avenge earlier loss to Cornhuskers

By Louie Novak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kendra Wecker led five Wildcats who scored in double figures as No. 9 K-State rolled past Nebraska, 89-69, Saturday.

Wecker dropped 18 points on 8-of-15 shooting as K-State avenged the 18-point thumping the team suffered three weeks ago to the Huskers in Lincoln, Neb.

A crowd of 10,300 were on hand to see the Wildcats win their sixth game in a row and improve their record to 19-3 and 10-1 in the Big 12 Conference.

"We got a lot of energy from the crowd here today," Coach Deb Patterson said. "I felt like this game we took the floor, were focused, intense and played true to who we are."

The performance the Cats showcased was the complete opposite of the one they had when the team suffered its only conference loss Jan. 24 to Nebraska.

"This was a mirror image of the first game," Husker coach Connie Yori said. "Here in the rematch, K-State was obviously the dominant team."

Freshman reserves Twiggy McIntyre and Claire Coggins combined for 25 points, while Nicole Ohlde and Laurie Koehn added 11 each. The Cats dished out 26 assists, the second most of the season, with Wecker, Ohlde and freshman Shanda Murdock contributing 16 from the post.

"I think our system worked good because we distributed the ball a lot tonight," Wecker said. "When you have two or three post players with over five assists, I think that just says a lot about the in and out game. We were knocking down shots and running the floor hard in transition."

K-State shot 32-of-60 for 53 percent and held Nebraska to 36 percent on 23-of-64 shooting from the field.

The Wildcats' balanced offense was deadly from beyond the arc. K-State nailed 64 percent of its 3-point shots and left the Huskers shell-shocked.

"We shot 34 free throws, outrebound K-State by 10 and lose by 20," Yori said. "That says something about what they were doing on the offensive end."

The Cats have won 30 consecutive regular-season home games, which include 15 straight Big 12 conference games. K-State returns to action Wednesday when they head to Texas A&M to take on the Aggies.

Coggins works on focus, increases playing time, stats

Claire Coggins

By Nabil Shaheen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week, freshman guard Claire Coggins said she wanted to get more focus out of her game and, to some degree, more control.

"I'm just working on being more focused and coming out and taking care of what I need to take care of, not playing with my head cut off," Coggins said. "You can't lose your focus by any means. You've got to keep your head in any situation because every possession matters."

On Saturday, in a career performance, she made every possession in her 21 minutes of play count.

Where there was a loose ball, she dove after it.

Where there was an open look, she took the shot.

Where there was an open player, she fed the ball.

The only thing in Coggins' way on Saturday against Nebraska was a referee who she ran into going down the floor on a fast break.

"I needed to pick up my game a little bit," she said. "I hadn't been producing a lot on either end of the court. I just needed to come out today and play hard."

She had a career-high 12 points in the game, shooting 4-of-8 from the field with 2-of-3 in 3-point shooting.

Coach Deb Patterson said she had challenged individual players throughout the week to make changes on defense.

And her recruit from Lee's Summit, Mo., so highly touted as an offensive weapon, answered the call defensively.

"I thought Claire made a huge difference on the defensive end of the floor and made some hustle plays," she said. "We've been talking about some changes we wanted to see out of individual players relative to their accountability on the defensive end, and I thought Claire did a great job individually as well as sparking our team."

Coggins grabbed three rebounds, stole three balls and got her first collegiate block in a game where she registered in almost every statistical category except turnovers.

"I just wanted to go after every loose ball that there was," Coggins said. "Sometimes I'm way too energetic on the floor, and sometimes it causes me to do bad things, but tonight I didn't do too many bad things. I just needed to come out and play chaotic on the defensive end, because they're a great offensive team and we just needed to slow them down."

Barely five months into her career as a Division I basketball player, Patterson said Coggins' ambition both helps and hurts her.

"She has really high expectations for her learning curve, and I think she might think of herself as hard-headed because most freshmen repeat the same mistakes 100 times, and that really ticks her off when she makes the same mistakes and hears it over and over from me."

It was not too long ago that junior forward Kendra Wecker was in those shoes, and she understands the trials and tribulations of beginning to understand K-State basketball so early on.

"There is a lot to learn," Wecker said. "When you come in as a freshman, they throw a lot at you. It's a lot to take on, but Claire especially has done a great job in just her pure athleticism and wing span and willing to be so active."

MLB | Yankees, Rangers agree on Rodriguez trade

Rodriguez

The New York Yankees and Texas Rangers finalized the terms of their shocking trade Sunday, and the players' association approved the deal for the American League MVP.

All that remains is for baseball commissioner Bud Selig to give his OK, which the teams expect Monday. The Yankees planned a Tuesday news conference in New York to introduce the newest prize in their collection of multi-millionaire All-Stars.

Texas will pay $67 million of the $179 million left on Rodriguez's record $252 million, 10-year contract, and will get All-Star second baseman Alfonso Soriano and a player to be named.

The Rangers will wind up paying $140 million for three seasons with Rodriguez, an average of $46.7 million annually for three last-place finishes in the AL West. The Yankees will owe him $112 million over seven years.

NASCAR | Junior wins 1st Daytona 500

Dale Earnhardt Jr. nearly traded paint with the car ahead of him, snatching the lead at the Daytona 500 with a brash, fearless move.

Earnhardt

Earnhardt later drove off the track in front of the main grandstand, spinning in the grass to celebrate his first Daytona 500 victory.

Just like his old man.

Earnhardt won NASCAR's biggest event Sunday on the same track that took his father's life three years ago, barreling past Tony Stewart with 20 laps left with a maneuver that would have made Daddy proud.

Junior showed the impatience of youth, needing only five tries to win the race that bedeviled his father for 19 years.

The race was attended by President Bush, launched the Nextel Cup era and came six years to the day that the Intimidator won his first and only Daytona 500 on his 20th try.

PGA | Daly wins for 1st time in 9 years

John Daly hit a 100-foot bunker shot within 4 inches to win a three-man playoff in the Buick Invitational, his first PGA Tour victory in nearly nine years. Luke Donald earlier missed from 6 feet.

Daly

Daly, No. 299 in the world ranking at the start of the week, closed with a 75, the highest final-round score by a PGA Tour winner in 13 years. He got up-and-down from bunkers 10 out of 12 times during the week, no shot more important than the playoff.

Worst first date

Flick as forgettable as character's memory

Seeing "50 First Dates" is an experience you'd probably like to soon forget.

From director Peter Segal comes yet another wholly forgettable comedy, this time about Henry Roth (Adam Sandler), a man who must try to regain the affections of his girlfriend Lucy (Drew Barrymore) every day.

"50 First Dates"
★☆☆☆☆
Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

Lucy suffers from short-term memory loss and cannot remember Henry from day to day, so each day becomes a new chance for the two to relive their first moments together.

Sound nauseating? You bet it is.

Much like Lucy's problem of having to relive a moment in her life over and over again, Sandler's career is all about repetition. He has played this type of role in every movie he's ever done.

Sandler again plays the nice-guy role he likely is doomed to play forever, and Barrymore is so bubbly and sweet you can feel a cavity coming on. It is so painfully obvious the two are trying to capitalize on the success of their previous joint venture ("The Wedding Singer") that it's almost saddening to see an accomplished actress like Barrymore pair herself again with a no-talent hack like Sandler.

Equally annoying are the bit players in the movie, the most prominent of whom is Rob Schneider, another "Saturday Night Live" alumnus who is grasping at proverbial straws in an attempt to resurrect a long-dead career.

Surprisingly, Sean Astin of "Lord of the Rings" fame appears in the movie as Lucy's brother.

He has very little to do comically, and his role seems forced, as if it were created just for Astin.

Apparently, he can't live off his small fortune from "Rings" much longer, but one would think he'd have the power to be a bit more selective in his choice of roles.

At best, "50 First Dates" is a ripoff of Bill Murray's 1993 classic, "Groundhog Day." The movie was funny because Murray was the only one who realized he was stuck in a time warp, reliving one day in his life over and over again.

In the case of "50 First Dates," the use of such a concept simply doesn't work, but oh, how director Segal tries.

The movie, while sweet and sometimes deserving of a chuckle, ends up falling flat on its face. Thankfully, through the power of choice, watching "50 First Dates" is not an event you're forced to repeat.

Incubus fails to find own sound, personality

★★☆☆☆
Album review by Jessica Grant

If Incubus could figure out their sound, they potentially could be a pretty great rock band.

However, their new release, "A Crow Left of the Murder," is an example of what happens when talented musicians change their style, yet fail to establish a unique sound.

Bands love to experiment with their music, and rightly so. But before this is acceptable, the band must first establish a cohesive sound. "A Crow Left of the Murder" is Incubus's sixth album, but it is just another muddled link in their struggle to find a niche.

From their debut in 1991, Incubus has attempted to build on the funk-rock that already existed in the mainstream via the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Both bands capitalize on snapping drumbeats, funky guitars, throbbing bass and odd vocals.

Incubus does have a disc jockey and a stylistically unique singer in Brandon Boyd, but some of their popularity comes from people who equate good looks with good music.

On Incubus' first two releases, "Fungus Amongus" and "Enjoy Incubus," the band went for a heavy, guitar-driven sound that was completed with Brandon Boyd's ability to sing quickly and melodically.

Their next two releases, "Make Yourself" and "S.C.I.E.N.C.E.," were truly notable albums.

Incubus managed to take their music to a new level, reveling in a funkier, less thrashing sound that helped to give them more mainstream attention.

Incubus then released "Morning View." Though this album was commercially successful, it was rather experimental for Incubus and relied more on rock elements than funk. "Morning View" was the album to build upon. Unfortunately, Incubus was not able to do this successfully.

"A Crow Left of the Murder" runs into problems because Incubus attempts to change their sound again, instead of simply building on what worked for them with "Morning View." Incubus reverts back to its thrash-rock roots but fails to do any justice to the unique sound it had begun to develop with its most recent albums.

The song "Megalomaniac" is fantastic, as well as the album title track. These songs start the album on a wondrously energetic note. The two songs are gritty and throw away the major-label production sound perfected on Incubus' last release.

The album fluctuates between trying to recapture the acoustic sound of "Morning View" and trying some sort of return to their roots, but it seems retracing the path to this album is impossible.

The main problem with this album is the sense of frustrating confusion.

Incubus alternates between soft and hard tracks, but the album doesn't have any real direction.

Brandon Boyd is one of the most talented lyricists in contemporary rock, but even his lyrics are unable to save this album. Boyd is trying to make an observation about the state of the world, but again the statement is rather unclear.

In all, this album is one true Incubus fans will staunchly defend. For the rock critic, this is a frustrating album from a band that just does not work up to its potential.

Incubus has the promise to be a really great band, but they need to get off the coattails of the Red Hot Chili Peppers and develop their own sound.

Faculty diversity growing in recent years

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jeanel Drake | COLLEGIAN

Associate Professor Ata Karim teaches Cultural Context in Leadership on Thursday morning in Bluemont Hall. Karim talked about communicating across different cultures. He is a faculty member from Pakistan and has not noticed discrimination directly toward him, but would like to have more faculty diversity.

Being in the minority is something faculty members at K-State have had to accept over the years.

Zelia Wiley-Holloway, assistant dean and director for the Office of Diversity in the College of Agriculture, and Ata Karim, associate director and assistant professor in leadership studies and programs, deal with being the only person of their ethnicity in their working environments.

"It's very challenging," Wiley-Holloway said. "It's challenging to be the only lonely."

Wiley-Holloway said she had worked at the University of Kentucky before coming to K-State in October, a school very similar in its white-to-minority ratio.

She said she has experienced discrimination in both places as an African-American female.

"What I've learned is that most of the time people just don't know what to say," she said. "I think I've gotten to the point now to where I know when to address issues and when not to."

Karim is from Pakistan and said he hasn't noticed discrimination directed toward him.

"I have a really, really good fortune to be able to work with the people I do," he said. "Personally, I have never had any challenges."

Karim said it is nice to be able to talk to people who understand his culture – even if they are students and not found in the workplace.

"Sometimes it is fun to be able to talk to someone without having to explain everything," he said.

Ethnic diversity is something K-State should strive to achieve, he said.

"I think every place should have many representative voices," Karim said.

"It would help the students. A lot of times when the population of any place does not have cultural diversity, they tend to have narrow definitions of things for life."

Did you know?

Faculty demographics

	1999	2000	2001	2002
White	1,073	1,015	1,029	1,026
Minority	142	164	169	186
Total	1,215	1,179	1,198	1,212

Source: K-State Fact Book 2003

The university practices affirmative action according to federal regulations, said Clyde Howard, director of the office of Affirmative Action.

"The rules do not say you have to have a certain number of minorities working," he said. "There is no quota."

The problem, however, is finding a large number of minorities to apply, he said, even though recent figures have indicated an increase in the number of minority faculty members on campus.

According to the 2003 University Fact Book, K-State had 186 minority faculty members in 2002 – 44 more than in 1999.

Part of the increase is due to positions that have been created within colleges to attract more minority faculty members.

Wiley-Halloway's job was created in the College of Agriculture to recruit students primarily of African-American, American Indian, Hispanic and Asian ethnicities.

"My job as dean is to recruit, retain and graduate ethnic minorities," she said. "I'm out recruiting undergrad and grad students to let them know what we have to offer."

Minorities comprise less than 10 percent of the students in the college, Wiley-Halloway said

"That's why I want to increase awareness," she said. "That shows we have a long way to go."

Although the university is not very diverse in ethnicity, Karim said he thought there were other factors of diversity well-represented on campus.

"We have good representation in demographics – urban versus rural, religious beliefs and political thought," he said.

Dan Donelin, head of the Department of Landsape Architecture and Regional and Community Planning, said his department looks to hire people of ethnic minorities.

"We first look for good people, and hopefully there are some minorities in the mix," he said.

When the department advertises a job position, it indicates minorities are encouraged to apply, he said.

In 2002, there were 50 faculty members in the College of Architecture, Planning, and Design, and three were in ethnic minorities.

"We would like to change. We like to have more minority faculty," Donelin said. "We think diversity is a good and appropriate environment."

Legal contracts should be reviewed with caution, care

By Oksana Boyko
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In-depth

The Collegian takes a look at the process of buying or renting a house or an apartment in the Manhattan area.

Renting a home or an apartment may sound straightforward, but students must take precautions before signing a lease.

The city of Manhattan, where 57 percent of households are occupied by renters, and K-State, which supplies most of these renters, offer students assistance and protection in this sometimes bothersome process.

"It's important to realize that a lease is a legal contract. A lot of students and people in general just do not realize that it's not something that you can break so easily," said Susan Lueker, director of consumer and tenant affairs with the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Lueker said she advises students to look at an actual place they are going to live before signing any papers.

Renting a place over the phone or Internet or after looking only at a model apartment in big apartment complexes may open a door for future inconveniences, she said.

"Another thing that students can do is to call the code services office and ask them, first, if the address you are going to be renting has had a lot of code violations and, second, if a landlord has been notorious for code violations," Lueker said.

The city of Manhattan has adopted the International Codes series.

Melissa Rickel-Morrill, residential inspector with the code services office, said she gets more calls from students when school starts.

"The most common violation – on the part of landlords – is the lack of smoke detectors in bedrooms. I usually give a landlord five days to install them. With other items it could be 30 days to complete corrections," Rickel-Morrill said.

Natalya Sidorovskaya, K-State graduate, said she and her roommates had arranged for an inspection in their rental house last year.

"Our house was in rather bad condition, but we didn't pay much attention to it since the school had already started and we needed a place to move in," she said.

"When the winter came, it became apparent that the heating was barely working.

"The paint in the bathroom was peeling off, and some rooms didn't have smoke detectors."

Sidorovskaya said a landlord had eliminated defects after the inspection, but an inspector did not visit the house for the second time to check compliance.

Fast facts

City of Manhattan International Code

1. A bedroom must be at least 70 square feet. If two or more persons are sharing a room, there must be at least 50 square feet of space for each person.
2. A rental must have a kitchen with a sink, at least two electrical outlets, and an adequate supply of hot and cold running water.
3. A bathtub, shower or toilet must be in service and free of leaks.
4. Smoke detectors are required in every bedroom and between each sleeping area.

If a rental has any of these defects, students can make an appointment with the city's code services office for an apartment or house inspection by calling 587-4506.
